Some Tenants in Strike Find It's Almost Fun

Lyn Revson worked two hours as an elevator operator at 32 East 64th Street. The car wasn't even with the floor here, but on-the-job training improved her performance.

By FRANK J. PRIAL
Lyn Revson runs the service elevator, Dick Tuck takes out the garbage, Joan Sovern lugs her own groceries and, somehow, in spite of the service employees' strike, life on the East Side goes on.

Mrs. Revson, former wife of the late Charles Revson, the cosmetics manufacturer; Mr. Tuck, the political prankster, and Mrs. Sovern, wife of the dean of Columbia University Law School, are among the tenants in a luxury cooperative who have pitched in to keep their building going.

While the tenants in the co-op did their volunteer tours of duty yesterday, negotiators for the striking employees and the apartment-house owners agreed, after a conference with Mayor Beame, to meet today in an effort to break their stalemate. [Page 44.]

Mrs. Revson, blond, tanned and wearing a T-shirt bearing her name over crossed tennis rackets, did a two-hour stint on the manually operated elevator just before lunch. "I took up Mr. Fosburgh," she said, "and he said I did an excellent job. I really got the car even with the floor."

Mr. Fosburgh, another resident, is James Whitney Fosburgh, painter, collector and onetime fine-arts adviser to the White House.

PRESIDENT'S VETO OF DAY CARE BILL UPHELD IN SENATE

Move to Override Loses by 3 Votes—Long Will Seek Compromise Measure

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 5—The Senate failed by three votes today to override President Ford's veto of the $125 million bill on child day care, and federally supported child care centers around the country are now in danger of closing. The vote was 60 to 34.

The House voted 301 to 101 yesterday to override the veto. The action today denied $125 million additional to day-care centers to help them achieve long-unenforced staffing and safety standards. The bill would have delayed until July 1 the implementation of those standards, which because of the veto are now in effect.

States found in violation of the staffing standards will lose Federal funds retroactively to last February. Health and safety violations will cost the states loss of funds retroactively to last October.

Long Issues Statement
The loss of Federal money would result in day-care centers' losing money and therefore having to close. Illinois, which would be hardest hit, would have to close centers for 35,000 or 40,000 children currently being served, state welfare officials said.

President Ford, who lobbied personally and hard against a vote to override in the Senate, could order Government agencies not to look for violations, which would keep centers from closing without giving them additional money.

After the vote today, the Senate Finance Committee's chairman, Russell B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana, said in a statement: "First, we will let passions subside for a few days. Then, we will try to come up with a compromise bill. We certainly don't want to deny the child care that is so vital to so many thousands of small children whose parents must work."

Pressure Reported
The Senate action came as a surprise to advocates of the bill, who thought that they could easily get the two-thirds of the votes of those present and voting needed to override a veto.

Liberals thought that they had assured favorable action with their argument that sustaining the veto and closing centers would cause working mothers to go on welfare, which is three times more expensive than day-care services.

But President Ford had put pressure on Republicans and conservative Democrats to help him in a show of strength, apparently to counteract, in part, his recent primary defeats.

Congress has overridden only

FORD IS REVIEWING STRATEGY IN LIGHT OF REAGAN'S GAINS

The New York Times/George Tamm

AIDES 'CONCERNED'

Consider an Attempt to Picture Reagan as Dangerous

By R. W. APPLE JR.
President Ford ordered a major review of his campaign strategy yesterday after four straight primary losses to Ronald Reagan—the most damaging series of electoral reversals suffered by an incumbent President since William Howard Taft lost 12 primaries to Theodore Roosevelt in 1912.

Among the proposals reported under consideration by the President's managers were the abandonment of public question-and-answer sessions, which often result in his being put on the defensive, and an attempt to picture Mr. Reagan as a dangerous and unelectable reactionary.

But the Ford strategists, deeply shaken by the President's crushing defeat at the hands of Mr. Reagan in Texas on Saturday and even more concerned after his losses in Indiana, Alabama and Georgia Tuesday, admitted that they had no real idea how to prevent future Democratic crossover voting like that which gave Mr. Reagan his 15,000-vote Indiana victory.

"Tough Race" Expected
"We think it's going to be a tough race," Mr. Ford said at an impromptu news conference in the Rose Garden at the White House, "but we expect to win." He omitted, however, his usual prediction that he would be nominated on the first ballot.

As the Republican race became closer, the Democratic contest became more of a run-away, with former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia winning in Indiana, Georgia and the District of Columbia on Tuesday, losing only the Alabama primary, to Gov. George C. Wallace. The Georgian's strategists predicted that he would have the 1,505 votes needed for nomination in hand by the time the Democratic convention opens July 12 in Madison Square Garden.

Now a 'Real Ball Game'
Many influential Republicans, astonished by Mr. Reagan's remarkable recovery from the brink of elimination from the Presidential race, said they now considered it possible, if still not probable, that Mr. Ford could become the first Republican President denied the nomination since Chester A. Arthur in 1886.

The former California Governor's victory in Indiana, said William McLaughlin, the ardently pro-Ford state party chairman in Michigan, "has made the race for the Republican nomination a real ball game."

BRITAIN APPROVES TOUGH PAY POLICY

Union Leaders Accept Limit of 4.5 Percent on Raises—Members' Views Awaited

By PETER T. KILBORN
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, May 5—The British Treasury and the country's trade union leadership, both openly anxious over the fall of the pound and Britain's continuing high inflation rate, agreed today to a tough new wage-control policy.

A product of an unusual, ever-tightening alliance of the Labor Government and the unions, the agreement restricts wage increases to 4.5 percent in the year beginning Aug. 1. It also sets a maximum increase of 24, or 27.32, a week for Britons earning more than $150 a week.

Living Standards
If accepted by the unions' rank and file, the policy means that many British workers will receive increases only half as big as those they are now getting under the 6% weekly limit that the Government and the unions worked out last summer.

For a work force then accustomed to 30 percent annual increases, even that policy seemed severe. The new one means that for a year or more workers will experience declining living standards because inflation, though now running at half last summer's peak of 30 percent, will erode their new pay increases soon after they get them.

Workers who a year ago were achieving the greatest pay increases in major Western countries are now faced with

11 Jersey Areas Ordered To Zone for Less Affluent

By WALTER H. WAGGONER
Special to The New York Times

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., May 5—The State Superior Court struck down today as unconstitutional the zoning ordinances of 11 Middlesex County municipalities and ordered the communities to make plans immediately providing a total of 18,697 low- and moderate-income housing units by 1985.

Judge David D. Furman, breaking new legal ground in the controversial area of exclusionary housing patterns, gave the 11 municipalities 90 days to develop zoning regulations that would enable them to provide their "fair share" of "present and prospective regional need for low- and moderate-income housing."

Basis for Ruling
The legal basis for Judge Furman's ruling was a case involving Mount Laurel last October, when the United States Supreme Court in effect upheld the New Jersey State Supreme Court decision that had struck down local zoning laws that excluded families with low or moderate incomes.

The nation's highest court refused to review the state court's "Excellent Opinion" Eleven other communities were later granted dismissals after they agreed to amend their zoning ordinances on terms acceptable to the plaintiffs and the court.

Judge Furman's opinion today went beyond the "fair share" doctrine by establishing what he called a "fair allocation" of actual housing units among the 11 municipalities.

In finding the zoning practices of the communities unconstitutional, the court said:

CAREY PLAN ASKS CITY U. TUITION

Student Fees Would Match Those at State Colleges—1,000 Stage Protest

By JUDITH CUMMINGS
Special to The New York Times

GOVERNOR Carey has called on the Board of Higher Education to approve a plan for the City University of New York that includes the same tuition charges as at the State University, a spokesman for the Governor said yesterday.

The State University rates will rise to $750 a year for freshmen and sophomores and $900 for juniors and seniors beginning next September. Henrik N. Dullea, the Governor's top higher-education aide, confirmed yesterday that Mr. Carey was referring to tuition at this level in remarks the Governor made a day earlier on the City University financial problem.

At City College, approximately 1,000 students marched to 125th Street from the campus at 138th Street, taking to the community their protests against the possibility of being forced to pay tuition for the first time.

The demonstration, which had been previously planned, marked the start of a three-day boycott of classes, along with the start of a three-day hunger strike by 13 members

Gov. Moore Cleared At Extortion Trial

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

CHARLESTON, W. Va., May 5—Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. of West Virginia and his former top aide were acquitted by a Federal jury today of charges that they had conspired to extort $25,000 from a businessman who was seeking a state bank charter.

The jury, which received the case last night, deliberated a total of seven hours before announcing its verdict to Federal District Judge Joseph H. Young of Baltimore.

If they had been convicted, the 53-year-old Republican Governor and William Loy, 49, his former administrative assistant, could have been sentenced to a $10,000 fine and 20 years in prison.

Engelhard Minerals to Double New York Headquarters Size

By MICHAEL STERNE

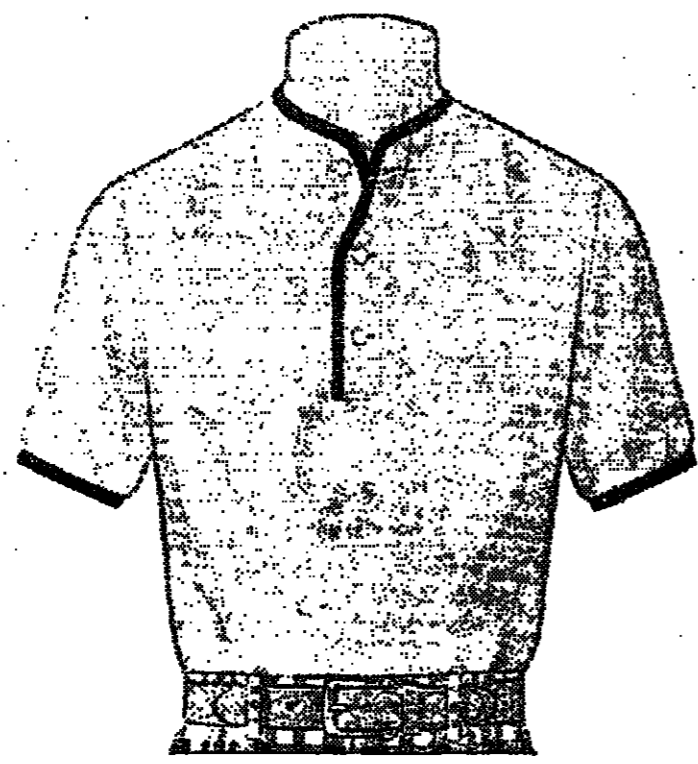

The Engelhard Minerals and Chemicals Corporation, with 500 New York City employees, announced yesterday that it was planning a major expansion of its headquarters here and would soon sign a 25-year lease for 155,000 square feet of space in the McGraw-Hill Building in Rockefeller Center.

"We are convinced that this city will continue to provide the best environment for our type of business," said Milton F. Rosenthal, president of the company, a multinational marketer of industrial raw materials with sales last year of $5.8 billion.

The Engelhard decision, which was made known to stockholders at the company's annual meeting in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, comes soon after several major companies disclosed plans to move their headquarters out of New York City to suburban sites. Among them were the Union Carbide Corporation, the General Host Corporation, Texasgulf Inc. and

Kissinger's Call for Ban on Chrome From Rhodesia Revives an Old Ritual

By STEVEN RATNER
Last week, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger announced during his swing through Africa that he would seek to end imports of Rhodesian chrome into the United States.

The speech prompted what has become an annual ritual in Washington — a debate among legislators, with help from business and social action groups, over the five-year-old amendment devised by Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Independent of Virginia, to circumvent the United Nations embargo against Rhodesia.

At the heart of the debate is Rhodesia's position with two-thirds of the world's reserves of highest grade chrome and as one of three major suppliers — Soviet Union and South Africa are the two others.

High grades of chrome, a dull black ore in its natural form, put the "stainless" in stainless steel. Chrome is also important in the production of jet engine parts, cast iron and alloy steel. Lower grade chromes, such as those used to make automobile bumpers shiny, are available in abundant supply from alternative sources.

U.S. Is Key Importer

But with no domestic supply of high-grade chrome, the United States last year was forced to import 570,000 tons of ore and 275,000 tons of ferrochrome, the purified form. Of this, 17 percent of the ore and 28 percent of the ferrochrome came directly from Rhodesia. The majority of the imports came from the Soviet Union.

This has spurred Senator Byrd and his allies to assert that the United States must not become dependent on a Communist country for a raw material essential to national security.

Opponents of the measure

They contend that supporting the United Nations resolution is proper and in the long run would prove fruitful if a black regime came to power. At the same time, they calculate that an import ban is likely to have minimal economic consequences. The business community stands solidly behind Senator Byrd's efforts, at least partly on the argument that a return to the ban that existed between 1966 and 1971 would only exacerbate existing supply and price problems.

Price Changes Traced
Whenever the amendment has been up for reconsideration, the Russians have doubled their price and cut shipments by 35 percent to reduce American inventories," charged E. F. Andrews, a vice president of Allegheny Ludlum Industries, which is a major user.

According to a spokesman for Union Carbide, the price of Soviet chrome moved from $27 a ton in 1966 to $56 at the height of the ban in 1971, then to $38 in 1973. Today the price is $170. Prices for both South African and Rhodesian chrome have remained lower.

Moreover, according to F. Perry Wilson, chairman of Union Carbide, "there are indications that the Russian ability to supply is less than in the past." By every estimate, the Soviet Union is believed to have less than 5 percent of the world's resources.

While, in the long run, American producers expect to become more dependent on South African supplies, the ore is not so good as the Rhodesian variety and the availability of South Africa's high-grade chrome is limited.

During the previous ban, however, according to opponents of the Byrd measure, few dislocations of consequence occurred. They attributed the price increase to the general upward trend of commodity prices and contended that domestic industry was never shut down for lack of chrome.

Moreover, American stockpiles are high — no one seems to know precisely how high. When combined with growing South African supplies, this suggests to Byrd opponents that the United States could safely withstand an end to Soviet chrome even without Rhodesian supplies.

The recession has also meant a sharp drop in the demand for stainless steel and that has in turn reduced the need for chrome. As a result, despite the price increases by the Soviet Union, supplies of chrome on the world market are plentiful.

Trade Talks Opened Nairobi by 150 Nations

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

NAIROBI, Kenya, May 3—A group of 150 nations opened today a formal session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Nairobi, Kenya. This is the fourth such session in 12 years and is one of the most important international trade meetings in the world.

The second major speech of the day was by Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations, who said that after 12 years of conferences and discussions not even a "modest package of measures" had been agreed upon.

"Have we therefore become the victims of procedural intricacies while we lose sight of our real objectives?" he said.

All of this has set the stage for Mr. Kissinger's speech, which comes at the end of a tour of Africa and his overtures to such nonaligned countries as Tanzania. Against this background the aides to the Secretary are describing the speech as the most concrete statement of United States commitment to meet the economic problems of the third world more than halfway.

While opposing the concept of fixed prices or a plan of world economy, the aides are suggesting mechanisms such as stockpiles of certain commodities maintained by the developed world in an attempt to regulate prices. They say that the effects of the Kissinger proposals will strengthen the negotiating hand of third-world countries.

There are some representatives of the third world who are openly dubious whether Mr. Kissinger can overcome opposition from multinational companies and from forces within the Treasury Department opposed to readjustments of trade benefits.

The conference has transformed this city. Instead of the normal swarm of tourists wearing bush hats and safari suits there are dark-suited diplomats wearing name tags. Limousines are double-parked everywhere. Restaurant conversation, which used to focus on which game park had the most elephants, now concerns tidbits and gossip

Kissinger's Tour of Africa (Talks With Six Presidents)

KENYA April 25-26
Secretary of State Kissinger opened his tour by discussing with President Jomo Kenyatta the possibility of U.S. military aid in view of Soviet arming of neighboring Uganda and Somalia. The Secretary said afterward that U.S. had no interest in maintaining regional balance.

SENEGAL May 1-2
The Kissinger tour of African countries ended with discussions with President Leopold S. Senghor, who stressed need for Western investment. In luncheon speech, the Secretary asked world's industrial nations to join in vast project to "roll back desert" in drought-devastated West Africa.

TANZANIA April 25-26
President Julius K. Nyerere gave a slightly reserved welcome to Mr. Kissinger's assurance of U.S. support for the concept of black majority rule in white-ruled southern African countries. Tanzania was considered a key stop because of Mr. Nyerere's influence with black African countries most interested in issue.

ZAMBIA April 26-27
Speaking at luncheon given by President Kenneth D. Kaunda, Mr. Kissinger pledged American moves to help force Rhodesian shift to black majority rule by seeking to tighten sanctions against Rhodesia's Government. But he also called for safeguarding of the rights of the white minority.

ZAIRE April 27-30
Mr. Kissinger's talks in Zaire centered on questions of economic and military aid with President Mobutu Sese Seko stressing military needs in view of the Soviet arming of neighboring Angola, Congo and Uganda.

Mr. Kissinger had also planned to visit Nigeria and Ghana. But with Nigerian-U.S. ties strained over Angola and other issues, the Nigerians canceled their invitation last month, and the Ghanaians did so last week. From Senegal, the Secretary returned to Kenya, where he is due to speak at a U.N. conference today.

specific issues were discussed in a welcoming President Jomo Kenyatta said peace and a never be attained and of prosperity token recognition of rounding oceans of about whether there will be a move to unseat South Africa and Israel from the conference. It appears that such a strategy is being put down and a member of the delegation for the United Arab Emirates said he opposed it.

Kissinger Sees Mozambican NAIROBI, May 5 (Reuters)

Secretary of State Kissinger today discussed the problems of Southern Africa with Foreign Minister Joaquim Chissano of Mozambique and ministers of other countries facing Rhodesia.

The three other ministers, who attended the 50-minute talk were Peter Siyoveiwa, a Tanzanian Minister of State, Rupiah Banda, the Zambian Foreign Minister, and Gaositwe Chiepe, Botswana's Minister of Commerce and Industry.

United States officials said the talks covered economic questions and Mr. Kissinger's speech in Lusaka last week in which he pledged America's unequivocal support for black majority rule in Rhodesia.

Lesotho Is Extending Military Service to Meet Threat of Guerrillas

WIN DARTON
The New York Times

LESOTHO, Rhodesia, May 3—Rhodesia extended the service for its armed forces from 12 months to 18 months to combat an upsurge in guerrilla activity.

Defense officials announced that the extension will mean that guerrillas will not only be "but decisively depealed for "constructive support" for measures taken "with the object of defeating terrorism and safeguarding the future of our country."

The guerrilla war began in December 1972 and was largely confined to a swatch of country in the northeast. Land mines were planted, tribal villages penetrated and, occasionally, white ranchers ambushed. Since January, the war has intensified and spread to the southeastern lowlands along the Mozambique border. Virtually the entire border now seems insecure.

The Rhodesian security forces are well-equipped and efficient. Since the start of "Operation Hurricane" in December 1972, nearly 800 guerrillas have been killed, according to government figures. The security forces have lost 94.

In language reminiscent of the United States actions in Vietnam, the new antiguerrilla offensive is built around "search and destroy" operations.

The army commander, Gen. Peter Walls, has warned neighboring countries that his forces will engage in "hot pursuit" over their borders to track the guerrillas to their camps.

Last night, in a radio address, General Walls said he would not "bet a ruble or a kopek" for the guerrillas' chances in the campaign.

"With the new resources available to us, I am confident of fairly quick success in both the civilian and military fields, and then we shall see whether the off-repeated boasts of the terrorists and their masters can be substantiated," he said.

Whites appear to have accepted the call-ups and increased military tempo calmly. In Salisbury, a city of lavish parks, broad boulevards, and immaculate streets, the fighting seems far away. Many appear convinced that the antiguerrilla campaign will succeed in a matter of months.

Angolans Said to Split on a Cuban Pullout

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 5 — Strains have reportedly developed in the Angolan leadership over proposals for a gradual withdrawal of 15,000 Cuban troops in the country, a truce with South Africa and a re-opening of Angolas to Western business interests.

According to United States specialists on Angolan affairs, this approach, which is favored by President Agostinho Neto, is being challenged by a radical leftist faction under the leadership of Interior Minister Nito Alves.

They note that Mr. Alves, in a series of speeches over the last month, has declared that Angola should be more militant toward the white minority Governments of South Africa and Rhodesia and should avoid involvement with Western business interests.

Tensions in Leadership

One American official said that according to information reaching Washington, mostly from Portuguese sources, "There are tensions between the political leadership under Neto and the Angolans who fill military positions."

American officials said that while President Neto has continued to place reliance on Angolans of mixed Portuguese and black ancestry, Mr. Alves has appealed to black militants in the Popular Movement "against the mulattoes."

"Alves wants strong exclusive ties with the Soviet Union, Cuba, the Third World and no technical links with the West," an American official remarked.

So far, it was said, neither the Soviet Union nor Cuba has indicated a preference between the views of Mr. Neto and Mr. Alves. While they backed Mr. Neto's ascendancy with arms and troops, it was Mr. Alves who attended the 25th Soviet Communist Party Congress as Angola's chief representative last February.

The Ford Administration estimates that the Soviet Union has already spent $200 million in military and economic support for the authorities in Luanda, the Angolan capital.

Should the views of Mr. Alves prevail, the officials say, the Soviet bloc would be obliged to continue a high level of military force in Angola for further assistance to Angola because little or none would be forthcoming from Western countries.

The American officials said they believed the Cuban forces now in Angola faced "a monumental task" in helping the ruling Popular Movement to consolidate control of the country and would have to remain "for a long, long haul."

They said the Cubans had found the Popular Movement unprepared to administer the country.

A Strain in Havana

One American official with access to intelligence reports said, "Some ministries in Havana are complaining that their industry sectors are 10 to 15 percent undermanned because of Angola."

The analysis said that the Cubans had found it necessary to provide technical assistance in Angola for such projects as repairing war-damaged roads and bridges, operating communications networks and directing transport.

The situation has led American analysts to conclude that Cuba is reluctant to free its military force in Angola for further actions in southern Africa and that the outlook for large-scale use of Cuban military units in Rhodesia or South-West Africa at this time is small.

The analysts said that Mr. Alves had apparently striven in recent weeks to intensify his struggle against Mr. Neto by rounding up "dissident" Popular Movement members, at the very time the Angolan President was stressing a need for "conciliation" in the country.

According to reports reaching here from Luanda, Mr. Alves has ordered the imprisonment of the so-called Active Revolt faction of the Popular Movement, whose members were described by some of the analysts as "moderate" or "pro-West."

The Interior Minister has also ordered a crackdown on Popular Movement members linked to the so-called Angolan Communist organization, which the analysts described as Maoist.

Calculated superiority

Calculators have come a long way in a short time. They've gotten smaller on the outside. Bigger on the inside. More powerful all around.

And since the beginning, Canon has been in the vanguard of the calculator revolution.

In 1964, we introduced the first 18-key system desk top calculator.

Then we brought out the world's first pocket-size printer. And our distinctive new breed of LP series printing calculators combines all the advantages of advanced electronic calculator technology with the basic design format of the adding machine keyboard.

With products like these, Canon is making today's problems easier to solve.

In the process, we're making quite a name for ourselves.

You qualify, and here's why. It's not your pretty face that puts you across. It's your personality. You're smart to everything that's coming down, from ballet stars to skate boards to style.

Therefore, ipso facto and dipso dido, on this day we dub you Ms. Star. And to prove it, you may cut out this  and paste it on your pinkie nail.

You see, only the folk (like you) who're wise to what's up in fashion know that stripes are  material as far as top designers are concerned.

settling for the lowest ones. "This 4.5 percent level of pay increase," said the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, "is likely to be below that in practically all the Western developed countries this year. Even the Germans, with their excellent record, are seeing a rate of increase of 5.5 percent."

In the United States, the average wages of manufacturing workers rose by 8.2 percent in the year ended in November and those of private nonagricultural workers by 7.6 percent. The cost of living, meanwhile, rose by 7.3 percent.

The agreement was reached a full month ahead of the June deadline that Mr. Healey had set a month ago during his annual budget message to the House of Commons. Talks began immediately, in the face of the decline in the pound, and they ended today at 3:15 A.M. after a 10-hour session at Mr. Healey's residence at 11 Downing Street.

"This is a simple and an honorable agreement," said Len Murray, head of the Trades Union Congress, the umbrella organization for the country's biggest unions. "It is the best news for many a long day," he said, "for Britain, sterling, and the people we represent."

Both Mr. Healey and the union leaders who make up the general council of the Trades Union Congress say they are determined to bring the rate of inflation in Britain to 5 or 6 percent, the level of the strongest Western economies, by the end of next year. They see the pay policy as the principal tool in reaching the goal.

Pound Is Erratic

Today's announcement, however, did little to help the sagging pound, which in falling from $2.35 a year ago is forcing many ordinary Britons to forgo their annual vacations this summer on the beaches of southern Europe.

The pound reacted erratically to news of the agreement, soaring and plunging repeatedly before ending the day about where it finished last night, at $1.83.

Some of the biggest currency dealers here were impressed with the policy. "I'm very pleased that a bargain has been struck," a Belgian dealer said. But others were worried that the trade union rank and file could kill it June 16 when they meet to consider it or that some of the country's more militant unions might resist.

The head of one of them, Emlyn Williams of the Miners' Union in South Wales, said today: "It is absolutely ridiculous and ludicrous to talk about a maximum of £4 a week in wage rises. I think some of these negotiators must be out of their heads."

Mr. Williams's members sent the pound reeling early this week in demanding £100 week for coal face workers, a 30 percent increase.

On the other hand, more union leaders on the general council of the Trades Union Congress supported the new policy than the last one, which has not been breached anywhere in Britain. Among them is Hugh Scanlon, head of the Engineering Workers, the country's second biggest union. Mr. Scanlon opposed the previous policy.

Bankers and currency traders also noted that the new policy exceeds the 3 percent ceiling that Mr. Healey said in his annual budget message last month was necessary "to bring our rate of inflation down to that of our principal competitors."

Tax Concessions Planned

The 3 percent, however, allowed for a variety of special adjustments for some workers. Mr. Healey maintained today, and the adjustments would have meant real increases of more than 3 percent. The new agreement, he said, disallows such adjustments.

In addition to the average 4.5 percent rise, Britons will be granted various tax concessions that Mr. Healey offered last month as a condition for accepting the 3 percent level. The concessions would add 1 to 2 percentage points to the 4.5 percent, which together come to half the 9 percent that the unions accepted last year.

The new policy, however restrictive, reflects the Labor Government's determination to redistribute incomes to close the gap between rich and poor.

Low-paid workers are assured a minimum increase of £2.50 a week, even though the increase represents 10 percent or more of their current pay. At the other end of the income scale, the £4 maximum means that some executives will receive only fractional increases.

With the tax concessions, a married worker with two children who earns £100 per week will realize a £2.47 increase in net pay. The worker earning the national average wage of £60 a week ends up with £3.45 more. A low-paid worker, making £30, would get £3.18 more.

BON REBUFFED ON AZORES PLAN

onomy Proposals Called 'Heavily Unsatisfactory'

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, May 5—Portugal's proposal for broad political and administrative autonomy for the Azores was rejected today by the regional authorities of the islands as "clearly unsatisfactory."

What the islanders want, according to sources close to the Azores Regional Junta, and Lisbon has refused to discuss is economic and monetary autonomy.

The Military Governor of the Azores, Gen. Altino Pinto de Albuquerque, presided over the meeting of the islands' administrative body, which demanded revision of the provisional autonomy statute approved by parliament last week.

In a communiqué, the Azores Regional Junta announced that it expressed its "concern and reservations" to the Portuguese President, Gen. Francisco Spínola, and had been unable to understand that change would be made in the new statute.

The islands have suffered for years from neglect and now we are to pay for their errors," the official of the Azores said.

The original proposal by the Azores provided that all revenue from international agreements involving the islands would go to them. This clause, pointing to United States and French military presence in the Azores, was turned down by the Lisbon authorities.

The Azores are expected to demand the islanders press is the right to make a decision of interest to the islands. By this they hope to get away with strict monetary controls imposed by Lisbon.

One of the junta's main objections is a recent alteration in the composition of the Azores Regional Assembly, which is to be elected by the islands in June. Under the new statute, the smaller, more contiguous islands have lost their status as principal islands.

They argue that the Socialists benefit from this change in the Assembly, the Azores Democratic Party, which is the leading political party in the islands, threatened to pull out of the junta.

Refugees in Lisbon Reopen Violence Aid Isn't Revived

Special to The New York Times

LISBON, May 5—Portuguese government threatened to take violent action if it did not restore subsidies.

Several hundred refugees from the former colonies of Angola and Mozambique occupied the square and the stairs of the palace of São Bento, the Parliament building, as well as the Prime Minister's office. The Cabinet meeting there tonight, was expected to take up the problem.

"We won't move until they do anything, we'll resort to drastic measures," a spokesman for the refugees said.

The measures were said to include invading ministries, closing supermarkets, taking over state radio and television stations or occupying the Lisbon bridge and collecting the money for their own needs.

More than 600,000 people have fled to Portugal from the former colonies over the last year and integration has become a major problem for this country under nine million.

The basic problem is that the government believed that the situation was temporary and that refugees would go home in a few months. But the leftist-supported Government of Angola and Mozambique have made it clear that a majority is not welcome.

Little has been done in long-term planning to solve the government's basic problems: unemployment and housing. This year's original budget for the government refugee agency was about $35 million and now it is said 10 times as much is needed.

Last Friday the Government announced that it was suspending all further food subsidies if case studies were completed of all the refugees—to avoid waste. But experts say that the case studies could take months. And in the meantime a significant number of people will be hungry and desperate.

KISSINGER'S VIEW ON SOMALIA ASKED

Senator Calls for Comment on Reported Saudi Offer

By ROBERT M. SMITH
 Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 5—Senator Dick Clark, chairman of the Senate African Affairs subcommittee, asked in a letter sent to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger today why the State Department reportedly ignored a Saudi-Arabian proposal to diminish Soviet influence in Somalia. Mr. Kissinger is now in Africa.

Senator Clark, who is an Iowa Democrat, called the allegation made by James E. Akins, the former American ambassador to Saudi Arabia, "a serious matter."

Mr. Akins told the Senate Multinational subcommittee yesterday, under oath, that the Saudis had offered to give Somalia the amount of economic aid promised Somalia by the Soviet Union if the United States would furnish Somalia with arms also promised it by Moscow. According to Mr. Akins, the Saudis even offered to pay for the American-supplied arms.

The former ambassador said the State Department had failed to respond to the Saudi offer.

Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho, noted yesterday that the Saudi offer came about the time that Congress was considering the Administration's request for a naval base at Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean.

The Administration had linked its case for a Diego Garcia base to the Soviet naval presence in Somalia.

Mr. Clark said that Mr. Akins' allegations were important "not only because of the way in which the Soviet presence in Somalia was used to justify development of the U.S. base at Diego Garcia, but because an important opportunity for countering Soviet influence and re-establishing Somali ties may have been missed."

The Senator told Mr. Kissinger that he had spoken with representatives of the Somali Government on several occasions and had come to believe that Somalia "is a government which would prefer genuine nonalignment."

Alluding to the Saudi offer, Mr. Clark said, "The alleged failure to react to the suggestion raises serious doubts about the genuineness of U.S. concern about the Soviet presence there."

At the State Department today, Frederick Z. Brown, director of the Office of Press Relations, said inferences drawn from Mr. Akins' testimony were "misleading."

During a news briefing, Mr. Brown refused to confirm that the Saudis had made the offer described by Mr. Akins, and insisted that "the Saudi issue has no relationship at all to our decision to build up Diego Garcia."

Mr. Brown said the former ambassador, a 22-year veteran of the Foreign Service and specialist in Arab affairs, was "not aware of all the facts," but he refused to say what the facts were.

"The situation is far too complex for me to go into in any detail," Mr. Brown declared. In response to another question, he said that he could provide no assurances that he would ever be able to offer more information on the subject.

U.S.-Soviet Arms Talks Start Month-Long Recess

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, May 5—The United States and the Soviet Union today recessed until June 2 their current round of negotiations to expand their 1973 accord on limiting their strategic nuclear weapons.

The talks last resumed on Jan. 28 in an attempt to complete an agreement to restrain their arsenals of offensive nuclear arms on the basis of the tentative outline fixed by President Ford and the Soviet leader, Leonid L. Breznev, at a conference at Vladivostok in 1974.

At that meeting they agreed on a ceiling for each side of 2,400 missiles and bombers. However, an accord on how newly developed weapons are to be fitted into the ceilings has eluded the two delegations.

Panama Blocks 2 U.S. Vessels In Canal, Citing Illegal Fishing

PANAMA, May 5 (AP)—A Panamanian gunboat has bottled up two United States tuna boats that are now in the Panama Canal Zone, and the Government has demanded that they pay fines of $100,000 each for having illegally fished in Panamanian waters.

The San Diego-based fishing boats, the Voyager and the Kali, are at Cristobal, at the Atlantic entrance of the United States-administered canal, Panamanian sources said that a gunboat was waiting outside the harbor.

The United States Government has not responded to the Panamanian demand.

Carlos Arellano Lennox, director of Panama's Marine Resources, said last week that Panamanian planes saw four United States tuna boats, including the Voyager and the Kali, fishing illegally in the Pacific Ocean on April 25. After a second aerial check April 26, Panama ordered a gunboat to intercept the fishing boats, Mr. Lennox said.

Two boats got away, and the Voyager and the Kali reportedly fled to Canal Zone waters. They crossed the canal from Balboa to Cristobal, where they have remained under United States jurisdiction.

A United States Embassy spokesman here confirmed on April 30 that the embassy had received a protest from the Panamanian Government that was "under study."

Panama claims a 200-mile coastal limit within which foreign fishing is prohibited and has set the fine for fishing illegally within that limit at $100,000.

Such a fine was levied Dec.

13 against the Japanese tuna boat Zenko Meru.

U.S. Receives Protest
WASHINGTON, May 5 (AP)—The State Department said today that it had received a note from Panama protesting that vessels owned by United States companies were illegally fishing in Panamanian waters.

A State Department representative said that Panama had indicated it would seek to fine the vessels, but no fines have been paid so far.

One vessel, the Voyager, reported to United States authorities that it had been fired upon by Panamanian aircraft, the State Department said.

The department said that the Voyager's log indicated that the vessel was not fishing.

House Votes Authorization For E.P.A. Research Work
WASHINGTON, May 5 (UPI)—The House has approved a $256.8 million authorization for the Environmental Protection Agency's research and development work for the next fiscal year—but is requiring a Congressional review of its work.

A House amendment provides that any rule or regulation related to the research and development programs authorized by the legislation can be canceled by Congress within 60 days.

The bill, which goes to the Senate, authorized the money to be spent for E.P.A.'s research and development activities for the next fiscal year.

RUMSFELD DENIES CHANGE IN POLICY

Publishers Ford Has Shifted Mideast Stand

DEIRDRE CARMODY
 Ford Administration has changed its policies in the East and has not lessened its commitment to the survival of Israel, Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld made his reply to a question at an annual luncheon of the Newspaper Publishers Association at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. His comment came a day after charges by the Defense Secretary, Schlesinger and Senator H. Humphrey, of Minnesota, that the administration's support for Israel was eroding.

Schlesinger, speaking to the American Israel Public Affairs Committee Tuesday evening, said that President Ford's undermining of moral support for Israel by putting pressure on it to make deals with the Arabs, Schlesinger, speaking to the committee, expressed anger at Ford's intention to appropriate a bill that provides for $550 million in additional military aid.

Stability and Security question - and - answer with the publisher, Mr. said: "The President's policy in the Middle East is one of stability. That has been the policy, that remains the policy, and I guess it will continue. President Ford is attempting to see to it that we have a policy to which improved relations with countries in the Middle East and the survival of the State of Israel."

Rumsfeld was also asked if the United States had become weaker because of the Soviet Union in the Middle East. He answered: "No."

The Defense Secretary spoke in support of a voluntary, stating that the Selective Service System, formerly been in effect for men. He pointed out that out of four men in a draft class, one man was in effect being drafted because he was unable to make pay in military service other than three men to make in the civilian place.

 to problem whatever compulsion to get military manpower to the country's national he said "I have a 50 or 60 percent pay cut. I would be making bad personnel management policies. I'm getting good people out of the service now and I'll make it," he said. "I'm the first one to go back to the draft."

the day, Judge Medina, a senior judge of the Second Circuit, said that the publishers that the government guarantees of speech and freedom of press were the most important freedoms in the world. He said that the publishers were even more important than the Sixth Amendment guarantee to a free and impartial trial.

Medina, who was presented with an award by the Newspaper Association, said he was opposed to guidelines for the press because "if you're making concessions to the government, that's the way you get down the chute." He said that the publishers get hold of those guidelines and the first thing they do is to change them. He said that the publishers are like a piece of meat on a rock, Judge Medina said.

A Cloud on U.S.-Israeli Horizon

By TERENCE SMITH
Special to The New York Times
JERUSALEM, May 5—Although the recent publicized arguments between the United States and Israel have concerned aid and arms supplies to Egypt, a more difficult, potentially explosive issue lies just beneath the surface.

News Analysis
It is the question of negotiations with the Palestinians. Serious concern is being expressed here about the possibility of a confrontation with the United States over the issue after the November election.

Officially, the positions of the two Governments appear to dovetail. Israel opposes negotiating with the Palestine Liberation Organization, and the Ford Administration, for the moment, is not arguing the point. The American position is partly a result of election-year considerations and partly a tacit acknowledgement that no substantive negotiations are likely this year regardless of Israel's position.

It is 1977 that concerns officials and policy-makers here. Then, they fear, a basic conflict may arise regardless of whether the Ford Administration stays in office or a Democrat takes over. In the interest of getting negotiations started and avoiding new fighting that might lead to a renewed oil embargo, the theory goes, any American administration is likely to press Israel to open negotiations with the Palestinians.

Unrest on West Bank
Israeli fears on this score, never far from the surface, have been aggravated lately by continued unrest on the occupied West Bank and the results of the recent municipal elections. Speaking privately, officials here concede that the United States is likely to view the widespread victories by the nationalist candidates in most of the West Bank towns as an endorsement of the P.L.O. leadership.

Eventual Rift Over Negotiating With P.L.O. Feared

Whether this is a legitimate interpretation of the results of the vote is beside the point. If the Palestinians become generally accepted in the United States and elsewhere as the representative leaders of the West Bank, the damage will already have been done from Israel's point of view. The inevitable result, in the opinion of officials here, will be American pressure on Israel to reconsider its stand. The P.L.O. will then move into a focal position in the negotiating picture and the role of Jordan will further erode.

This bleak prospect—bleak at least in the view of the Government—is why senior figures here are so upset about the outcome of the West Bank elections. It is not the change in local leadership that concerns them, but the conclusions that the United States and the rest of the world are likely to draw.

Sweep Was Surprise
Had they suspected three months ago that the nationalist victories would be so sweeping, the officials say, they would have postponed the elections for at least six months or until the area was calmer.

Beyond the elections, the Israelis realize that the continued Arab strikes and demonstrations on the West Bank affect American opinion. Riots come almost daily now, and the drumbeat of headlines about the disturbances injects an additional urgency into the situation.

Furthermore, the P.L.O. and the Arab states are expected to do everything possible to keep the West Bank boiling. Although the demonstrations are a genuinely indigenous phenomenon, fueled by the grievances of the local population they are continuously applauded and encouraged by the Arab and Palestinian radios. In lieu of any diplomatic or military progress against Israel, the Arab strategy for this year, in the opinion of specialists here, is to keep the heat on the West Bank and fulfill the prediction of the Egyptian President, Anwar el-Sadat, that 1976 will be the year of the Palestinians.

For all these reasons, then, Israelis are apprehensive about the situation on the West Bank and its impact on the negotiating situation. They see support for their hard-line position on the Palestinian issue eroding with every upsurge of nationalism on the West Bank.

Rabin Stands Firm
Nonetheless, there is no evidence that the Government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is rethinking its Palestinian strategy. Our position is not going to change, one policy-maker said firmly last week.

Instead, the Rabin policy is to clamp down hard on the West Bank, using whatever force is necessary to keep the situation from getting out of hand. Some Israelis are concerned about the negative image this creates abroad, but the Government appears determined. At the same time, the Arab population appears to be committed to its new activism. Having found its voice after eight years of quiescence, it is unlikely to give it up easily. The prospect is for a long, hot summer on the West Bank, followed, if Israeli fears prove correct, by an eventual argument with Washington about how to deal with the unavoidable issue of the Palestinians.

ISRAELIS WOUND 2 IN THE WEST BANK

TEL AVIV, May 5 (AP)—Israeli troops shot and wounded two Arabs in the West Bank of the Jordan today as Palestinians demonstrated against Israeli occupation of the territory conquered in the 1967 war. The unrest came in the midst of tight Israeli security in the occupied territories and on the borders as the country observed Independence Day. Hospital authorities said the two wounded, a 45-year-old woman and a 13-year-old girl, were being treated for light wounds.

The Israeli military command said gunfire had hit rioters in the town of Nablus, where the market quarter has been sealed off for nine days in an effort to curb demonstrations.

Security forces dispersed small crowds of Palestinians in Ramallah and Jenin, an army spokesman said, and kept the town of Tulkarm under curfew for the third day after troops clashed with stone-throwing students.

West Bank Arabs reported disturbances at the El Amari refugee camp near Ramallah.

Residents of the Nablus market section have been confined by steel riot gates and kept under curfew since outbreaks of rock throwing and fires in the streets.

Seven Arabs have been killed during recent demonstrations on the West Bank, including two children hit by Israeli Army gunfire.

ELI CRITICIZES
EGYPTIAN TACTICS

at U.N., Calls Stand
L.O.: Hypocritical

PAUL HOFMANN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., May 5 (AP)—Eli Alper, Egyptian ambassador to the United States, today criticized Egyptian tactics in an effort to reach a settlement in the Arab world during Palestinian expression to Egypt's charge that Israel used "barbaric" methods in the occupied West Bank. Chaim Herzog, the Israeli prime minister, declared that the government of Israel would not accept the "double-faced" tactics of the Egyptian government.

Herzog spoke during a session of the Security Council's 5-nation Arab League at the Council's 2,000th meeting on Tuesday.

Herzog said that an Arab League resolution to bring about a settlement in the Middle East debate in the Security Council conflicted with the Israeli position. He said the Sinai disengagement agreement of last September was an interim accord, not a final settlement. He said Israel pledged to resolve the conflict peacefully.

Under the terms of the interim accord, the Egyptian delegate, Abdel Moneim El-Baroudi, said that the interim accord had not contemplated the establishment of new settlements and other "bases" in the occupied territories.

Chief delegate, Abdul Moneim El-Baroudi, urged the Security Council to seek "a peaceful and continued uprisings" in the occupied territories. He said the United Nations should urge Israel to abide by international law.

Allaf of Syria said the Arab League resolution represented as "a step toward the Middle East," which he said "quickly developed into a South Africa," a term based on extrajudicialism.

Critical of U.S. 200-Mile Fishing Zone

May 5 (Reuters)—The United States has told the Soviet Union that it disapproves Washington's action in establishing a 200-mile fishing zone. Tass press agency said.

The Soviet Embassy in Washington had made it known to the State Department that the Soviet Union held "a reservation" of the United States report, under the "Unlawful Action," Soviet statement to the United States but not of the statement had.

that "the adoption of a 200-mile zone for the U.S. is counter to the effort being undertaken to reach a mutually acceptable decision at the Conference on the Law of the Sea in New York."

PRESIDENT'S VETO UPHELD IN SENATE

eight of Mr. Ford's 48 vetoes since he took office almost two years ago.

There was almost no floor debate today. Voting largely followed party lines, with a few conservative Democrats voting to sustain and a few liberal Republicans voting to override.

New Jersey's Senators, Clifford P. Case, a Republican, and Harrison A. Williams Jr., a Democrat, both voted to override. So did Lowell P. Weicker Jr., Republican of Connecticut. Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, was out of the country and missed the vote. So did Abraham A. Ribicoff, Democrat of Connecticut.

James L. Buckley, Conservative-Republican of New York, voted to sustain the veto.

President Ford vetoed the compromise bill April 6, objecting most strongly to giving money to states to bring them into compliance with staffing ratios set by the Federal Government. He also objected that the bill would have broken a 4-year-old Congress-approved ceiling of $2.5 billion a year on Federal social service expenditures.

Day Care Cuts Protested
More than 1,000 workers, parents and children picketed the headquarters of the Emergency Financial Control Board at 270 Broadway yesterday to demand an end "to the hatchet job on the day care program."

The demonstration against the closing of 28 centers plus further cuts in the day care program was called by Day Care Local 205 of District Council 1707, Community and Social Agency Employees.

CIVIL SERVICE SHIFT OPPOSED BY BLACKS

WASHINGTON, May 5—Civil rights advocates and black Congressmen are opposing proposed changes in the Civil Service Commission that they feel will seriously weaken job protection for members of minority groups in the Federal work of minority groups.

The changes would be made through legislation introduced by Representative David N. Henderson, Democrat of North Carolina, who is chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee. The committee was to try to act on the proposal tomorrow.

The legislation introduced by Mr. Henderson would require that personnel actions in the Government be "without regard to preferential treatment," but this has appeared to some civil rights lawyers to be a possible weapon against affirmative action programs aimed at increasing the presence of women and members of minority groups in the Government.

A subcommittee has changed that language, but the opponents say they remain unhappy because there is no language in the legislation requiring action by Federal agencies to hire and promote members of groups that have suffered from discrimination.

A Whooping Crane Chick

LAUREL, Md., May 5 (UPI)—A whooping crane chick was hatched today at the Government wildlife center here, said Dr. Cameron Kepler, who heads the program at Patuxent Wildlife Research Center to save the endangered species. The male chick expands the whoopers' world population to 85. If the chick survives, he will be the first whooper successfully hatched and grown from parents raised in captivity.

MALIGNED
ING IN DEATH

Also Weighed Plan ass His Widow,
e Study Reports

INGTON, May 5 (UPI)—Federal Bureau of Investigation said today it smeared the Dr.
King Jr. even after his death, treating him as a Soviet agent, and to harass his widow the staff of the Senate committee and Intelligence activities reported to-

F.B.I.'s attempts to discredit King did not end with his murder in 1968, said in one of a series of reports on what it calls its "secret war" against American citizens.

It also said, however,
and no evidence that it had been involved in King's murder. A Justice Department group is investigating the matter separately.

A report, prepared by a Senate panel's investigative staff and not signed by any of its members, said that Edgar Hoover, the former director, had sued a "vicious venue" against Dr. King from 1964 to 1968, sometime after his death, to discredit his memory and to stop Congress from celebrating his birthday a national holiday.

That William Sullivan, Hoover's former deputy,
was the overall campaign manager against King and thousands of suspected radicals as tough, dirty business men.

"Kids were barred," Mr.
Sullivan testified at committee hearings. "We have used similar techniques against Soviet agents. We did not differentiate between them and King."
Sullivan is a rough, tough conclusions the panel has published before. It said that Mr.

Hoover considered Dr. King and a dangerous agent in America.

Hoover's "agent leak sought" he had directed his staff to prove Dr. King was influenced by tap-phones, bugging his home and harassing him.
The anonymous report, published, that Dr. King committed a "major disclosure of an intelligence matter."

Hoover's report also included disclosures about a campaign that followed King's death.

Congress was considering his birthday holiday. It said the time records division was "checking" Candidates who might keep the holiday in committee if
Dr. King was a scoundrel.

Hoover has yet to vote on the holiday bill.

Hoover also said the F.B.I.
field office proposed in 1969 a "counterintelligence" against Dr.
Hoover and his widow.
It did not know details of it or whether it had led out, but quoted a memorandum as saying the program might be used to prevent the bureau from entertaining counterintelligence against Covatta
and/or the continuation of the public
Martin Luther King."

Panthers Affected
INGTON, May 5 (AP)—
Federal headquarters approved
2,300 actions in a drive to disrupt and dis-organize organizations from the Black Panther Party, Antioch College, according to the report released by the bureau's Counterintelligence Committee.

Report by the staff of the intelligence committee said that many of the actions approved in the 15 years from 1971 "may have violated the civil rights of specific criminal stable others "involved serious bodily injury or the targets."

Frank Church, chairman of the intelligence committee, called for the release of the report, a renewed call for of a Congressional parliamentary intelligence operations for a special procedure to investigate possible charges against officials involved in intelligence

7-page report outlined of "counter intelligence" operations a "staggering range of beginning" in 1966
the Communist Party and ending in 1971
students demonstrating bureau's use of "dangerous" or blatantly unethical techniques aphave become less re-with each subsequent report, the report said.

counterintelligence tactics in the report, such as anonymous letters accused of infidelity or aging warfare between groups, have been pre-reported.

Open Admissions Straining the University of Bologna

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times
BOLOGNA, Italy—The Via Zamboni in the center of this old city is the "hottest" thing Europe's oldest university has to a campus.
It is the main thoroughfare along which the buildings of the University of Bologna are aligned—perhaps too near a sword for the layout created by accretions since the 11th century.
Professors and students live along and off the Via Zamboni, where posters, handbills and graffiti proclaim student political interests and bookstore windows display their academic concerns. The Via Zamboni is a permanent chaos of pedestrian and motor traffic, of crowds it can hardly contain, of a university strained beyond its capacity. The lines that form about noon at the main university restaurant and obstruct movement on foot and on wheels are its daily symbol.

"There were 12,000 students when I studied here 12 years ago, 30,000 during the student movement in 1968 and 50,000 or 60,000 today," said Prof. Tiziano Bonazzi, a specialist in American history.

"It is chaos, a nightmare for me to think of what will become of them all," said Prof. Gianfranco Minguzzi, a psychologist and psychiatrist.

One of the demands of the student militants of 1968, strongly supported by liberal members of the faculty, was for a widening of educational opportunity, an opening of the universities to all who wanted to study. The demand was granted by a government whose inactivity made it impossible to strong pressures but whose economic weakness did not dissipate it to provide the necessary financial support.

All special requirements for university admission were dropped, and any graduate of any high school, including vocational ones, can now enroll at any branch of any Italian university, including the medical schools. Bologna is a relatively modest-sized university; people here console themselves with the thought that enrollment at Rome University is 120,000.

"In Fact Reactionary"

"It looks democratic but is in fact reactionary," said Dr. Anna Maria Gentili, an assistant professor of African studies. She was speaking with a number of young professors in the office of the political science department. All are in their thirties, all had been active supporters of the student movement and remained on the political left and all were chagrined by the present state of the universities.

"It is perhaps more elitist now than before," said Dr. Gentili. "Because these dry more people and proportionately less access to professors or facilities."

"We have opened up the door of the universities and don't let most of them take advantage of it," Professor Bonazzi said. "Those who get something out of it are still those who come from privileged backgrounds. The rest come from the mass and are abandoned to themselves. We see it in our graduate students. They are the ones who are motivated from the beginning, mainly because of the background they come from.

Small Increase in Teachers

The professor accused the Government of having made an empty political gesture by lowering barriers to university access. He said that the rush of students was disproportionate to the modest increase in the numbers of teachers and other staff members and university facilities.

"We need more universities but they must have money," Professor Bonazzi said. "We have opened new universities without even libraries. There are 1,500 students in Bergamo with almost no books."

"The Government," he said, "let's put them in the universities because we have no jobs for them," one professor said.

The teachers said that the crush had been worst in the humanities, apparently because of their appeal to those without strong academic backgrounds. But at Bologna's famous medical school, professors were equally dependent.

"I am most unhappy," said Prof. Floranzo Stripo, who teaches general pathology. "I've tried to prepare myself in some 20 years of very hard work to do something" to the number of these a student may try to pass the examination. Professors find themselves squeezed out by faculty members as many as 200 students in one exam period.

The only structural reform in university organization that resulted from the 1968 movement was limited student participation in faculty and administrative bodies. But in this year's election of student delegates, only 25 percent of those eligible voted. A coalition of left parties won six of the seven student seats on the body.

The greatest change has been not structural but in the attitude of the students. They are now more questioning.

Prof. Gentili said that the professors are more liberal and behave less like the establishment than was the case in the past. She said that she had to change her teaching style.

But she said that the students are very reasonable. Some times they are more conservative. She said that she had to change her teaching style.

Best Figures Show 244 People With Incomes of $200,000 or More Paid No U.S. Income Taxes

EDWARD M. KENNEDY, Democrat of Massachusetts, the leader of the tax reform forces in Congress, who called upon the Senate to take action "to stop this massive tax avoidance by wealthy individuals."

The I.R.S. report showed that there were 244 persons in the over-$200,000 income group who paid no Federal income tax in 1974, the year for which tax returns have just been analyzed. Of this total, five had incomes in excess of $1 million. In 1973, the number of persons in the over-$200,000 group who paid no Federal income tax was 164. Seven millionaires paid no taxes in 1973. For 1972, the numbers were 108 and six respectively.

Not only the number but also the proportion of high-income persons who do not pay Federal income taxes is rising, the figures showed, although the proportion remains under 1 percent.

For 1974, the proportion of those with incomes of $200,000 or more who paid no Federal income tax was 0.78 percent. The comparable figures for 1973 and 1972 were 0.64 and 0.47 percent.

A Law of 80

The number of high-income recipients who completely avoided paying income tax hit a low of 80 in 1971, the second year in which the special "minimum tax" designed to prohibit such tax escapes was in effect. Congress passed the minimum tax in 1969 in response to a public outcry over the disclosure by Joseph W. Barr, the last Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, that 237 such high-income persons had paid no Federal income tax for 1968. The figure for these tax-avoiders peaked in 1969, if he has a substantial amount of income.

Senator Kennedy charged, however, that the Finance Committee "has been busy dismantling" the tax reform bill passed by the House last year, which makes changes in the minimum tax that would increase the number of persons who pay it from 30,000 to 112,000 and increase the amount of tax collected under it from $225 million to $1.3 billion.

The minimum tax applies not only to those who would otherwise pay no Federal income tax but also to persons who pay relatively small amounts compared with their actual incomes.

There are a number of exceptions and exemptions, however, that have narrowed the impact of the minimum tax, and the house bill deals with some of these.

900 Cardiac Pacemakers Termed Subject to Failure

WASHINGTON, May 5 (AP)—The Food and Drug Administration announced today that about 900 cardiac pacemakers made by a Texas concern and implanted in heart patients might be subject to premature battery failure. The manufacturer, Intermedics Inc. of Freeport, Tex., is advising doctors across the country to step-up monitoring of patients who have had the pacemakers implanted and consider replacement if the patient's heart is totally dependent on the medical device. No deaths or injuries have been attributed to the problems, the F.D.A. said. The announcement covers all C-MOS-1 Demand Pacemakers with serial numbers between 100 2100, the agency said. # New York Senate Votes 10% Cut in Welfare Aid; Democrats Call the Bill a Futile Election-Year Ploy

By RONALD SMOTHERS
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, May 5—The Republican-controlled Senate, in a widely condemned vote, passed a bill today that would reduce by 10 percent grants to the 1.6 million public-assistance recipients in the state.

God we know this one-house bill, said Sen. Robert Garcia, Democrat of the Bronx, referring to the bill that would cut the Assembly's Social Service Commission from the Democratic-controlled Assembly.

Senator Major R. Owens, Democrat of Brooklyn, countered that Mr. Smith's justification for bringing New York grants in line with the national average was illogical and failed to take into account the higher cost of living in the state and the state's own criteria of what was the standard need.

"We are getting closer to what Hitler called the 'final solution' when we are no longer willing to consider need," he said.

There were these other developments on a day that many considered "the lull before the storm" of long sessions and "heavy lifting" that usually characterizes the end of the legislative session.

Amendments that would stiffen a pending bill requiring public bodies to conduct their business in public cleared the Assembly Government Operations Committee, and the bill as amended is expected to pass both houses.

Under the bill, party caucuses, such as the regular Senate and Assembly party conferences, are specifically exempted and may remain closed to the public.

Governor Carey signed a bill delaying until Sept. 1, 1976, the assumption by Family Court of exclusive jurisdiction over adoption proceedings.

Albany Accord Reported on New Tax To End School Budget Crises in State

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, May 5—Governor Carey has reached "General agreement" with the Legislature on a proposal to permit cities and school districts to impose an optional state property tax to pay for employee pensions and other benefits, various officials said today.

At the same time the preliminary accord has several technical details to be ironed out, plus some key political issues to be resolved, before the tax itself can be levied in Rochester, Buffalo, Yonkers and dozens of school districts that face budget crises this year unless the Legislature acts soon on some form of tax for them.

The goal is to achieve a solution to the fiscal problems prompted by the so-called Hurd decision of 1974, in which the Court of Appeals ruled unconstitutional the state tax laws that permitted cities and school districts to pay for employee pensions with funds raised outside their legal taxing limits.

Property vs. Income Levy
Buffalo, for example, has a constitutional tax ceiling of $39.6 million, based on 2 percent of the five-year average of the value of its taxable real estate. But its total tax this year is actually $86 million, because it has excluded from the limit the costs of retirement, Social Security and health benefits.

Lawmakers from both Buffalo and Rochester, which has a similar tax situation, have advocated a property tax that is imposed by the state—at local option—to help meet the Court of Appeals objections to the way the ceiling is exceeded at present. In a message to the Legislature last December, Mr. Carey also suggested this approach. But other lawmakers have been holding out for consideration of a local income-tax surcharge, instead of the property tax, on the ground that taxing income is more progressive.

Senator John E. Flynn, a Yonkers Republican, also favored the income-tax surcharge, because he said it was a better way to tap the city's wealth. Mr. Flynn said today, however, that he was dropping his insistence on an income-tax surcharge and was agreeable to letting the state property tax go through the Committee on Cities, of which he is chairman.

Some Legislators Dubious
Doubts remain among other legislators, however, that the new approach is any more constitutional than the previous one. Buffalo, Rochester, Yonkers and several school districts upstate are now exceeding their taxing limits under emergency legislation enacted last year and due to expire June 30.

The Legislature had hoped that a solution could be achieved by a constitutional amendment to permit the cities to exceed their taxing limits, but the amendment was defeated by the voters last November. Senator Flynn said that the issues to be resolved included how the cities or school districts will request the use of the state property tax and how the Legislature will establish the maximum levels that they can tax.

Other Republicans, moreover, are opposing any resolution of the property-tax problem until the Democrats in the Assembly agree to relent in their opposition to a 1-cent increase in the sales tax for Nassau County. The sales tax has already passed the Republican-controlled Senate.

One side working on the property tax problem acknowledged that there might still be constitutional difficulties. Another problem that hovers over the discussions is primarily political. Legislators and their aides said today they wanted to make sure that local residents knew that the cities, and not the Legislature, were responsible for the property tax levels, even as lawmakers come up with a legal mechanism to make the taxes valid by having them emanate from Albany.

New Jersey Will Increase Marlboro Hospital Security
FREEHOLD, N.J., May 5 (UPI)—The state has agreed to increase security at the Marlboro State Hospital to prevent escapes by dangerous inmates. In return for the promise, Judge Thomas L. Yaccarino in Superior Court lifted a ban yesterday against the transfer of inmates to Marlboro from the Vroom psychiatric unit at Trenton State Prison.

Judge Yaccarino had issued an order against the transfers two weeks ago at the request of officials of Marlboro Township. They had complained that escapes were a daily threat to the community.

4 Men Are Arrested in Shooting Of Russell Means and 2d Indian

WAGNER, S.D., May 5 (AP)—Russell Means, leader of the American Indian Movement, and another member were shot early today at a housing area on an Indian reservation near here, Attorney General William French Smith said.

Mr. Means and John Thomas, the other victim, underwent surgery at Sacred Heart Hospital in nearby Yankton and both were listed in satisfactory condition.

The hospital administrator, Ron Morton, said Mr. Means suffered a single steel-caliber bullet wound in the lower chest. Mr. Thomas underwent exploratory surgery for damage to the face and neck from a single shot, he said.

Four men wanted in connection with the shooting were taken into custody in Sioux City, Iowa, Mr. Janklow said. The four were identified as James Weddell, Michael Weston, Russell Turner and Terry Provost.

Mr. Weston and Mr. Weddell were charged in the Indian occupation last July of a pork plant here. Mr. Weddell, charged with assault and burglary, escaped and had remained at large. Mr. Weston was free on bond after his conviction on burglary charges in the incident.

Mr. Janklow said Mr. Means and Mr. Thomas were at the Yankton Sioux Reservation near the Nebraska border in southeastern South Dakota to Falls.

Russell Means

plan an AIM treaty conference scheduled for the reservation later this summer.

Mr. Means, a co-founder of the militant Indian organization, gained national attention when AIM members and supporters took over the village of Wounded Knee, S.D., on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in 1973.

Mr. Means was shot last year in North Dakota in an incident in which he was charged with interfering with a Bureau of Indian Affairs officer. He recovered and was acquitted.

He is appealing a conviction in connection with a riot at a county courthouse in Sioux Falls.

City Selling Houses at $10 Each For People Willing to Fix Them

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

New York City officials announced yesterday the formal start of an "urban homesteading" project in which 34 run-down, foreclosed houses will be given for $10 each to Queens and Staten Island families able to rehabilitate them.

But the officials immediately stressed that the project was not a "giveaway." The families taking part will have to pay off sizable rehabilitation loans, meet maintenance and other homeownership costs and pay title closing fees that can run from a few hundred dollars to $1,000.

In addition, each homesteader will be required to put $2,000 into an escrow account for emergency problems that might arise during the rehabilitation period, which is a maximum of 18 months.

Actual rehabilitation costs will vary from house to house, ranging from $5,000 to $20,000, according to the city's Housing and Development Administration.

As previously reported, "housing lotteries" will be held if the number of qualified applicants turns out to be greater than the 34 houses involved in the program. The houses—all single-family properties, except for one two-family structure—are mainly in South Ozone Park and Baisley Park, Queens, with several in New Brighton, S.I.

Only residents of Staten Island and certain zip-code areas in southern Queens are eligible for the program. The Queens zip code areas are 11412, -13, -14, -16, -17, -18, -19, -20, -21, -30, -33, -34, -35 and -36.

Those interested in the program must write for applications to the Housing and Development Administration, Urban Homesteading Program, 100 Gold Street, Room 9158, New York, N.Y. 10038. Requests for applications must be received by May 15.

People who have already written to the agency for information about the program need not write again; applications will be sent to them, too, if they live in the eligible areas.

Based on earlier news accounts of the planned program, 3,000 people have already written to the housing agency, according to Arnold Rosen, an official.

"To help assure" that families involved in the program can carry the rehabilitation, maintenance and property-tax costs, city officials have set minimum income limits for eligibility. For a household of four or less, minimum gross income is $14,000 a year. It is $15,500 a year for larger households.

"This is not a program for the poor—it's for upwardly mobile, moderate-income people," Mr. Rosen said. Other officials have estimated that total housing costs for homesteading families—including paying off the rehabilitation loan—are likely to range from $200 to $300 a month.

Families participating in the program must agree to live in the homes for a minimum of three years.

The New York City homesteading project is part of a federally sponsored homesteading effort involving about 1,000 homes in 23 localities across the country.

Other participating localities in this area are Jersey City and two Long Island communities, Freeport and Islip. The programs are locally run.

Arson-Plagued Town Relieved by Closing of Its Fire Department

By DONALD JANSON
Special to The New York Times

EAST LANSDOWNE, Pa., May 5—Residents of this blue-collar Philadelphia suburb of 3,200 people are breathing easier since their volunteer fire company was disbanded last Thursday.

After a rash of fires that investigators attributed to arson in the Fire Department itself, Mayor William M. Smyri Jr. has closed the firehouse till the company can be reorganized.

"After one of the fires killed my sister-in-law last June," said Mrs. Anita Padgett, "people started putting in floodlights." "People were afraid, they really were," said Joseph A. Lauro.

Mr. Smyri said that townspeople became fearful in the two-year rash of suspicious fires in homes, garages and a church that they began leaving lights on all night.

"We started a town watch," he said, "with auxiliary police riding around and parking in people's driveways to keep an eye out for anything suspicious."

Albert Pinner Jr., a 19-year-old volunteer fireman from nearby Upper Darby, is charged with setting 16 fires, including one last June that charred the big red-and-black brick home of Mrs. Ophelia Giordana, 55 years old, and left her dead of smoke inhalation.

At a preliminary hearing Monday the Delaware County authorities read a statement, that they said the young fireman had made, in which he allegedly admitted setting that fire. He faces murder and arson charges in that case. He was released on $200,000 bond but will be back in court Friday for hearings in additional arson cases.

Destruction of Evidence

Yesterday Edward Joines, chief of the volunteer fire company for 20 years, was arrested on charges of destruction of physical evidence in a fire in another occupied dwelling in 1974 that the teen-age fireman is accused of setting.

Michael Coll, Assistant District Attorney for Delaware County, said the 56-year-old fire chief destroyed a partly burned flare that was used to set the blaze.

This was the second charge lodged against the longtime, unpaid chief, whose personal yellow and white car had "Fire Chief" painted on the doors.

Last Thursday Mr. Joines was arrested on charges of falsifying public records in another 1974 blaze Mr. Pinner is charged with setting in an occupied house. The complaint contends that the chief logged a false report on the fire, attributing it to smoking by an occupant, though investigation shows no one was in the house for 24 hours preceding the blaze and the fire was set.

It was after the chief's first arrest Thursday that the Mayor closed the firehouse. He asked two neighboring towns to provide fire protection for East Lansdowne till the 35-man fire company here can be reorganized.

Two lieutenants in the company, John and Paul Fisher, are charged with committing perjury while testifying in another East Lansdowne arson case. In that case Paul Fisher and Stephen Ryan, who is not a fireman, were acquitted. Mr. Ryan and Mr. Pinner as well as the Fisher brothers face perjury trials as a result of testimony that led to those acquittals.

Progressively More Serious

Detective Robert Seitzer of the District Attorney's criminal investigation division said that his 10-month investigation of the East Lansdowne situation showed a "pattern" of suspicious fires dating back to 1971 that "progressed from grass fires to fires in garages, then vacant houses, stores and occupied houses."

In an interview at his house a few doors from the locked firehouse, Mr. Joines called the charges against him "ridiculous. On Monday night he resigned as chief, he said, so that fire protection for the borough could be restored.

First, said Mr. Lauro, treasurer of the fire company, the bylaws of the company will be revised to give its board of directors a veto over the fire crew's choice of a chief. The crew has annually reflected Mr. Joines. "The chief signs up the volunteers," said Alfred L. Padula, brother of the victim of the fatal fire. "His choices have been very poor. He took hippy kids. He made the firehouse a hangout for them."

Investigators said the motive in setting the fires was the thrill of doing it and having fires to fight.

"For the last two years," said Leonard R. Speidel, who has lived here 47 years, "people have been scared to leave their houses unwatched. The situation won't really be back to normal till all the answers are in and things are straightened out."

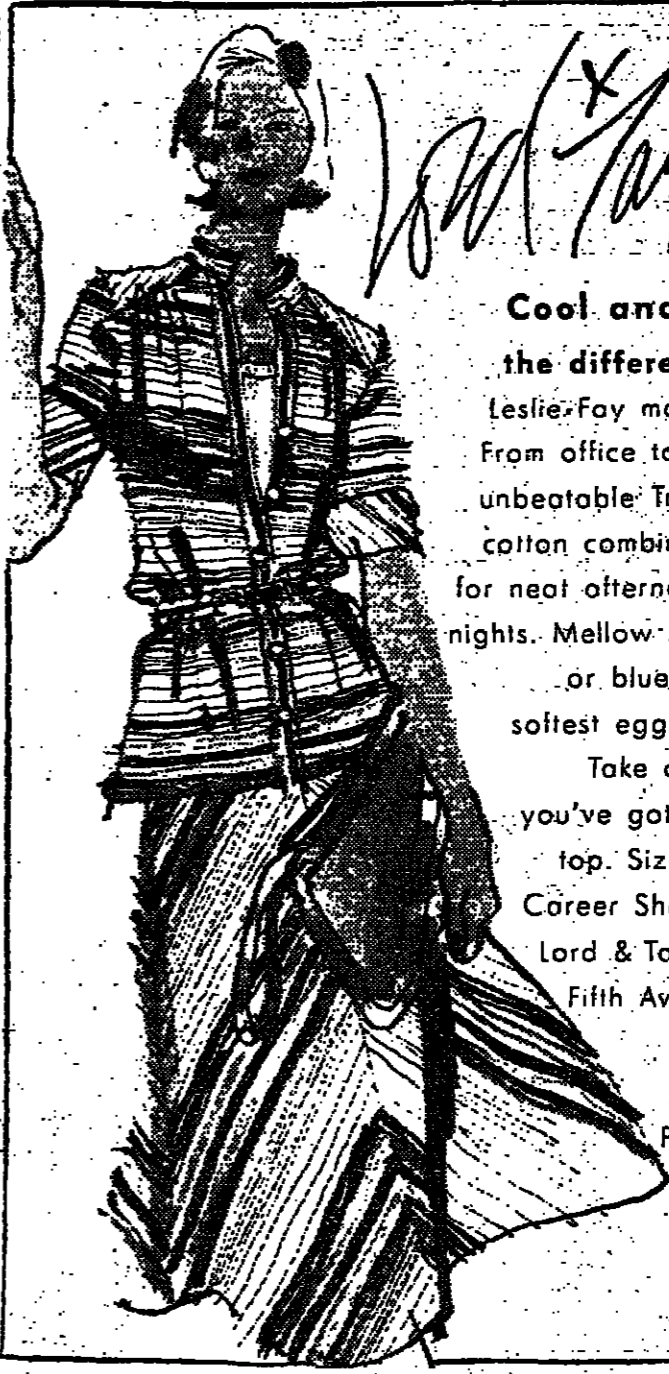

One of the answers residents are seeking is how Chief Joines made his living.

In an interview, the tall, bald bachelor repeated what everyone in town knew: He has never held a paying job.

"How do you manage?" was asked. "I don't feel that anyone's business," he said.

Howard Hughes Medical Institute. A spokesman for Summa was asked today why a news release issued by the company yesterday did not note that the Bank of America had been named a defendant in the Wilmington proceedings. He said not told of that fact, he said. There was no explanation from Summa why the Bank of America had possession of the Summa shares. A spokesman for the bank said there would be no immediate comment. But sources familiar with Mr. Hughes's affairs in the last decade gave two possible explanations.

One version was that in 1966-67, when Mr. Hughes was buying the casino that made him Nevada's biggest gambling operator, he needed capital and negotiated a loan of $100 million, leaving the stock certificates to guarantee the loan. The other version was that Mr. Hughes needed an appeal bond of $70 million when he appealed a multimillion dollar judgment against him won by Trans World Airlines. He gave the bank physical possession of his Summa stock while it had the bond posted, according to this explanation.

Both explanations agree that Mr. Hughes at his death no longer had any obligation to the bank, but had merely neglected to have the shares restored to his own control.

The suit in Delaware in effect asked the Chancery Court to select the true heir of Mr. Hughes's estate, and it seemed to some legal observers to be a means taken by Summa executives and the Gano family to counter the attempt of Bruce Altman, Los Angeles county public administrator, to take charge of the estate.

Mr. Altman was among the long list of defendants named. In addition to many members of the Gano family, the list included public officials who collect inheritance taxes here, and Noah Dietrich, named as executor in a purported Hughes will that turned up mysteriously last week in Salt Lake City. Summa executives have avoided comment on the purported will.

Different Probate Laws The various states have significantly different laws governing probate matters, and Summa's lawyers have elected to try to achieve their ends in Delaware, rather than in California, Texas or Nevada, where state courts have matters pending involving the Hughes estate.

The only will anyone has produced is the one found in Salt Lake City, which now is held in the Clark County clerk's office in Las Vegas, Nev., it was found on a desk in a vacant office in the headquarters of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latterday Saints. This document is viewed with suspicion by men who have followed Mr. Hughes's affairs, including most of his principal former employees.

Today District Judge Keith Hayes in Las Vegas, who has scheduled a hearing on the will's authenticity May 21, allowed a handwriting expert from Los Angeles to examine it.

The handwriting examiner, Jack Harris, said he was retained by a Los Angeles lawyer who represents three sisters—Barbara Cameron, Elizabeth dePoull and Agnes Roberts.

Mrs. Cameron filed an affidavit with the Las Vegas court saying she and her sisters are granddaughters of Rupert Hughes, the late novelist, who was Howard Hughes's uncle. They claim half the estate. They claim half the estate, the position says, under a provision of Texas law entitling paternal and maternal relatives to share equally as groups.

Mr. Hughes owned property in Texas, and there is a question whether his legal residence was in Texas, California or elsewhere. Also in Las Vegas, a Tennessee lawyer appeared today to denounce the purported will as "not valid and positively a forgery." Alex Meacham of Nashville said he represented three paternal cousins of Mr. Hughes—Jeff Melton, Hughes, Elizabeth Hughes McDugald and Felix Turner Hughes.

Mr. Meacham, of Smyrna, Tenn., asked for a delay beyond the May 21 hearing and vowed to "prove the will is not valid." Judge Hayes issued instructions that the purported will be shielded in a plastic envelope that would protect it in visual examinations. He also granted the request of District Attorney George Holt that it be photographed in black and white, in color, and infrared and ultraviolet lights. He barred chemical tests at this time. In Salt Lake City the Mormon church closed its investigation of how the purported will came to be found on a desk in a room that had been vacant all that afternoon of Tuesday, April 27. The church spokesman, Jerry Cahill, said the investigators produced a composite drawing of a woman that one of the lobby receptionists thought she saw that afternoon with an envelope. "But the drawing hasn't rung any bells as far as people here are concerned," Mr. Cahill said.

In the first 30 days after Mr. Hughes died, the court fight over his great wealth has begun. Generally, the combatants fall into the five following groups:

1. The executives who ran his companies, who do not expect to inherit anything, but hope to see the properties go to the Howard Hughes Medical Institute that they say Mr. Hughes wanted to support. Top Summa executives control the institute.

2. The group named in the purported will, Noah Dietrich, 57 years old, once Mr. Hughes's top aide but estranged for two decades, named as executor, but not as a beneficiary. He has elected to try to validate and probate the will; as executor his fees would be immense.

3. The named beneficiaries range from Summa executives who doubt the will's authenticity, to a young man who tells a bizarre story of having picked up Mr. Hughes along a Nevada highway in 1968.

4. The relatives of Mr. Hughes from his mother's family. This group is led by Mr. Lummis. This group seems to be allied with the Summa executives and willing to have the medical institute inherit the estate.

5. Two sets of relatives from Mr. Hughes's father's family, the one group from Tennessee, and the three daughters of his uncle, Rupert Hughes.

6. The public interests, which include the Internal Revenue Service, which may take three-quarters of the estate if no will is found leaving it to a charitable trust, and the public administrators and inheritance tax collectors from various cities, to a young man who tells

Miss Dewhurst, a Lasting Laugh

Colleen Dewhurst broke in to uncontrollable—and unrehearsed—laughter at Tuesday night's performance of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" Miss Dewhurst relates the incident to difficulties she has been having in giving up smoking while playing a role in which she must carry a cigarette in many scenes and to the impulsiveness of her fellow troupers. "They know I'm very tender these days," she said. The Tony Award winner "broke up" when she delivered the first-act line "Some people feed on the calamity of others," which was apparently interpreted on stage as a reference to the joshing Miss Dewhurst gets about her smoking problems.

It took two lines, several rounds of encouraging applause and a full minute for Miss Dewhurst to regain her composure.

In a dressing room interview yesterday, the actress said that she and Maureen Anderson, another member of the cast, "both have a tendency to do that sort of thing." As for the males who play opposite them, Richard Kaiton and Ben Gazzara, Miss Dewhurst says: "The men are just twinklers—it amuses them to see it."

Stephen Elliott and Joni Gwiazdowski are research assistants to the New Jersey Assembly's Democrats and Republicans, respectively. They were sitting, as usual, on opposite sides of the aisle the other day when a resolution offered by Assemblywoman Barbara Curran of Union County sent Mr. Elliott across the aisle to hug his Republican counterpart. The resolution, which also brought the couple a standing ovation, congratulated them on their coming marriage in Princeton Saturday at St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church.

Miss Gwiazdowski, a 1973 graduate of Connecticut College, went to New Jersey as a fellow of the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers. Mr. Elliott, a 1966 graduate of Michigan State University, is working on a master's at Lehigh University. They have had their jobs for two years and have dated for one. Holding "strong philosophic feelings about our respective parties," they will continue to marshal data for opposing legislators after a honeymoon in Bermuda.

With a Princeton undergraduate record of 21 A-plus grades, and nothing lower than his 9 A's, J. David Germany has won the role of valedictorian for the June 8 commencement. Susan L. Hurley, a philosophy major from Santa Barbara, Calif., will be salutatorian. Mr. Germany is an economics major from Mansfield, Ohio. When he found time to study is a bit of a mystery. He has been teaching assistant in accounting, editor of the yearbook, co-director of the Campus Fund Drive and an appeals adjudicator for campus parking violations. He has a fellowship waiting at Massachusetts Institute of Technology but no summer job. He said yesterday, "I've got to support myself."

Ohio University's school of journalism held its awards dinner last night as the eighth annual communications week was marked on the Athens campus. Patricia Carbine, publisher and editor in chief of Ms. magazine, and A. M. It is named for the late managing editor (1904-25) of The Times, who attended Ohio University.

The Bob Considine Internship in foreign correspondence, established this year by colleagues of the late columnist and broadcast commentator, was presented by his widow, Millie Considine, to an Ohio University graduate student, Thomas J. Dr. Aly, professor emeritus of speech at the University of Oregon, is currently at Kent State University.

Samuel Eliot Morison, winner of two Pulitzer Prizes for his biographies of Columbus and John Paul Jones, has been in Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston for several days. A hospital spokesman said yesterday he could give no details, at the request of the family of the 88-year-old historian. But The Boston Herald-American, reporting Mr. Morison in "critical" condition, said he suffered "a paralyzing stroke five days ago and lapsed into unconsciousness."

Frank Sinatra complained in a $3-million damage suit yesterday that a recent book portrayed his life as "boring and uninteresting" and the singer as "devoid of any depth as a human being." Earl Wilson, the author of "Sinatra: An Unauthorized Biography," and the MacMillan Publishing Company were named in the suit filed in Federal court here by Stephen Gillers, lawyer for Mr. Sinatra. The suit charged unfair competition with the singer's planned autobiography, common-law copyright infringement and exploitation of the Sinatra name for a book that, while "favorable and complimentary," presented a "fabricated" and "false" version of his life. SAFETY BID MADE ON GAS TERMINALS

Four States Ask F.P.C. to Act on Liquefied Tanks

PHILADELPHIA, May 5—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware petitioned the Federal Power Commission today to establish standards for selection of sites for liquefied natural gas terminals to minimize the perils of fire and explosion in heavily populated or industrialized areas.

In 1973, an explosion and fire in a liquefied natural gas tank on Staten Island killed 40 persons.

The four states said in the 13-page petition that distributors of liquefied gas were seeking permits for two new terminals on Staten Island and two on the lower Delaware River in New Jersey.

All four projects are planned for areas of concentrated population and industrial development on the Arthur Kill and the Delaware.

Deputy Attorney General Thomas J. Oravetz of Pennsylvania said that as soon as the commission received the petition tomorrow, the four states would file motions for a moratorium on further consideration of these applications by the commission until site standards were established.

Petition Is Quoted

"The four projects all involve a substance which is extremely hazardous," the Attorney General of the four states said in the petition.

"There is no dissent from the view that an L.N.G. spill on water possesses the capacity to form a vapor cloud or fire that could endanger human life.

"There is also no disagreement that the risk of a catastrophic accident, which is small, is nevertheless real."

The four states said that the commission handled each application for a construction and operating permit individually, without applying any uniform criteria, even though the nuclear regulatory commission had developed criteria for granting permits for nuclear power plants that kept those facilities out of heavily populated areas.

"Petitioners cannot accept the Federal Power Commission's present ad hoc system of response to industry applications," the four states said. "The public interest dictates that the commission must develop a rational and organized method of deciding where to locate L.N.G. marine storage terminals."

"Fairness to our citizens dicates no less, and the commission's failure to do so would have been filed by Districts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

Th petitioners said that the planned projects represented a technology which is new to the United States and relatively untried throughout the world.

Only 12 seaborne shipments have reached American ports, they said.

However, they added, at least 1,800 will reach the Delaware River and Staten Island facilities within five years if the power commission approves the

Bridge: Americans Narrowly Beat Italy in Qualifying Match

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

MONTE CARLO, Monaco, May 5—Italy and the United States, the two teams favored to reach the final of the Bermuda Bowl world championship here Friday, played their second qualifying match against each other tonight, with the American team winning 11 to 9.

The match was close throughout. If either team had won by a wide margin, the losers would have been in danger of failing to qualify for the final, since Israel, Brazil and Australia still have chances.

And the result affects the final, for part of the scores in the qualifying matches between the teams is carried forward. The Italian world champions scored a big victory against their chief rivals earlier in the week, and therefore have a potential advantage in the final.

A second victory by a wide margin would have given the Italians a large carryover for the final, and could have resulted in eliminating the United States team, allowing Israel to gain the final. A final against Israel would not be welcome to the Italians, for they have lost twice by large margins to Israel, which would therefore have a large carryover against them.

Israel, in its match against Australia tonight, also won by 11 to 9, and in the other match, Brazil beat Hong Kong by 16 to 4.

Top Two Will Compete

The standings after eight qualifying rounds, with two rounds remaining tomorrow, are: first, United States, 99; second, Italy, 93; third, Israel, 91; fourth, Brazil, 88; fifth, Australia, 77½; and sixth, Hong Kong, 23½. The two top teams will qualify for the final Friday.

In sixth-round play this afternoon, all the favored teams won. Italy beat Brazil, 20 to 0, seriously hurting the qualification prospects of the South American champions, who had begun the day in second position. The United States beat Australia, 16 to 4, and Israel beat Hong Kong, 19 to 1.

In the Venice Trophy match between women's teams representing the United States and Britain, a storm in a teacup developed when Rixi Markus, Britain's most famous woman player and a World Grandmaster, inquired the meaning of a simple bid, one no-trump in response to a one-heart opening. Her partner then reopened with a double, conceivably influenced by the question into believing that Mrs. Markus held a fair hand, and collected a 500-point penalty. An appeal was made to the committee, which adjusted the score to one no-trump undoubled.

After 84 deals of a scheduled 140, the Americans led by 135 international match points.

The Italian team, usually a well-oiled machine, has been functioning erratically. The Italians seem to have recovered from the initial embarrassment caused by the allegations made in Italy about some leading players, but Benito Garozzo has been highly dissatisfied with the performance of his young partner, Arturo Franco. He expressed this dissatisfaction vocally at the table when his team was losing heavily to Israel last night, and insisted on playing the second half of the match with another partner.

Perhaps the most dramatic deal of the championship occurred last night when the Brazilian star Gabriel Chagas helped his team to score a narrow victory over the United States by making a fascinating grand slam.

The bidding, as shown, began with diamonds being bid from the North side, following the Brazilian version of the Precision system. Two no-trump simply showed a powerful hand, and three clubs was ambiguous, showing either a hand with one minor suit or a hand with both majors. South did not choose to find out and launched into Blackwood. When he finally bid seven diamonds, a contract that would probably have failed, Ira Rubin, the American West, decided to save in seven spades.

This could have been doubled and down eight tricks for a penalty of 1,500, but Chagas as South persevered to seven no-trump. After West made the safe lead of a diamond, the declarer examined his prospects and had some reason to believe that the club finesse would fail, since spade length was on his left. South ran six rounds of diamonds, cashed the spade ace and played the last diamond, producing this position:

NORTH
 ♠ K J
 ♥ 8
 ♦ A J
 ♣ A J

EAST
 ♠ Q 10

 ♦ Q 8 7
 ♣ Q 8 7

SOUTH
 ♠ A 7
 ♥ K 4 3
 ♦ K 4 2
 ♣ K 4 2

The king and ace of clubs were taken, forcing West to part with a heart. The play of the spade king then ruined East, who was caught in the second stage of a nonsimultaneous double squeeze.

In the replay, the Americans rested in six diamonds, and Brazil gained 13 international match points. So

Today's Hand

 ♠ K J 10

EAST

 ♦ 8 6
 ♣ Q 8 7

SOUTH

North and South were vulnerable. The bidding: South West North East 2 N.T. Pass 3 ♣ Pass 4 N.T. Pass 5 ♣ Pass 5 N.T. Pass 6 ♣ Pass 7 ♣ 7 ♣ Pass Pass 7 N.T. Pass Pass Pass

West led the diamond jack.

Rubin had considerable cause to regret his save over seven diamonds, which gave the declarer a vital clue. If he had passed, the United States would almost certainly have won the match and improved its total score by five victory points.

SMALL CRACK FOUND IN A B-1 TAIL SECTION

WASHINGTON, May 5 (AP)—The Air Force told Congress today it had discovered a small crack in a test model of a tail section for the controversial B-1 bomber.

A spokesman said it was the first failure in a major part designed for the bomber, which is under heavy criticism from Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, and others, partly because of its high cost.

The five-inch semicircular crack was found in a spare separate tail assembly undergoing "fatigue testing" at the Rockwell International Corporation's Los Angeles plant, a spokesman said. "The section was built to be tested, not flown," he added.

Two B-1 bombers, which have been test flown a total of 34 times, are not being grounded as a result of the tail section failure, the spokesman said.

Ichabod Crane Gets Headstone Set Aright

A six-foot toppled marble headstone of Ichabod Crane, whose name was to become part of literary history, is now standing upright again at an old cemetery on Staten Island because of the efforts of a group of student-veterans from Staten Island Community College.

The name Ichabod Crane for his "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" because it was one of the most unusual names he had ever heard, according to an article published by the Staten Island Historical Society.

The author and Col. Ichabod B. Crane, who is buried at Asbury Church of the Nazarene Cemetery in Bull's Head, were said to have met when they were in military service during the War of 1812.

The headstone of Colonel Crane had lain in four pieces until it was cemented together by the student members of the college's Veterans Advisement Center.

Chess: Retain It or Exchange It? End-Game Decisions Count

By ROBERT BYRNE

Knowing which pieces to keep and which to eliminate by exchanges is a major part of end-game technique. Here are some standard examples: Where the pawns are four-to-three on one side of the board, rook endings, queen endings and bishop endings are generally draws. For the superior side to win, it should arrange to keep a knight, the piece that operates at maximum efficiency over limited terrain, with the same number of pawns, but where they are distributed far apart on both wings, the bishop is dynamic in creating a passed pawn and forcing it through to promotion.

Position after 28 K-N1

There are cases where a slight sacrifice of material can be utilized to reduce to a favorable ending. In the instructive game between the Cuban international master Roman Hernandez and the United States grandmaster candidate Kenneth Rogoff, from the 11th round of the Las Palmas International Tournament, Black found it opportune to give up two knights for rook and pawn to create an ending where the remaining rook swamped White's knight.

On the other hand, his 12 BxP was hardly a correct sacrifice, for even though he emerged with three pawns for a piece with 15 NxB, the doubled pawns resulting from 15... QxQ; 16 PxQ gave him an inferior ending.

Nevertheless, Rogoff experienced problems in demonstrating how to win, principally because the strong white center pawns limited the mobility of the black knights after 22 P-K3. Moreover, eliminating the rooks by 22... R-KN1; 23 RxR, KxR would have presented the black knights with a hard task of coping with white pawns on both wings.

Call of the Wild Hernandez could have transposed into a Neo-Grünfeld Defense by 8 P-Q4, but the call of the wild impelled him to investigate 8 Q-R4. W-N3; 9 Q-R4. Rogoff, citing the white queen's limited avenues of retreat, avoided 9... P-K4 in favor of 9... ♡-B3. Since the exchange 10... BxB; 11 QxB would have allowed the white queen to breathe easy, Rogoff interposed 10... P-K3.

To aim for safety by 11 ♡-Q3, Q-K1; 12 Q-K4 would probably have been Hernandez's best course, but since he had played 11 P-Q4, he should have made a gambit out of it by 11... P-N4; 12 Q-R5, NxB; 13 NxB, QxN; 14 B-K3; Q-K4; 15 QxQ1, ♡-Q4, which leaves the black position somewhat loose.

Rogoff's excellent solution was to give both his knights for rook and pawn by 28... N/5xBP!; 29 NxB, NxB; 30 KxN, accepting a slight material deficit for the sake of allowing his rook to prove its superiority in an open position with pawns on both wings.

Hernandez's 38 N-N7ch led irrevocably to Black's coming out ahead in material after 41... ♡xP, but the alternative 38 N-Q4, R-QB1; 42 P-R4, R-B8; 43 K-B3, K-K4 was equally lost, since the black king cannot be prevented from reaching K5.

After Rogoff's 49... R-KR7, the imminent advance of the QRB would have cost Hernandez his knight, thus compelling the Cuban master's resignation.

Reality on the Fire Escape

By ANATOLE BROYARD

FORT APACHE, by Tom Walker. Edited by Roger W. Bushner. 195 pp. Crowell $7.95. On more than one occasion in "Fort Apache" police officers running up a fire escape in the South Bronx to confront an armed suspect on the roof of a building have noticed that quite a few people were looking out of their windows at the "show." It was better than television. The man or men on the roof might be suspected of murder, felonious assault, robbery, rape or arson. When the police finally cornered them, as they often did, it was a question of who would be shot and who would survive, but some of those at the windows did not seem to care. For them, it was an entertainment.

his rhetoric to a minimum. He seems to regard apocalyptic statements as shots fired unnecessarily. The 41st Precinct was named Fort Apache because it was so often besieged by mobs. The common procedure on these occasions was rather puzzling: The police would barricade themselves inside while stones shattered the windows and the mob forced the front door. Then a dozen officers would wade into the crowd wielding baseball bats against clubs, chains, knives and pipes. In this age of technology, the tactics of the police seem unnecessarily masochistic, since they often got hurt. In view of the fact that the attacks were described as frequent, one would think that tear gas, or another less primitive and bloody solution, would be used. Something like a high-powered fire hose might be rigged up. One wonders, too, why the police have not developed anesthetic darts, such as those used to capture wild animals. When any humans behave like wild animals, this would seem to be the least painful approach for all concerned.

Universal Emotions

The area surrounding Fort Apache was populated mostly by Latins and blacks. In one of his few moralizing asides, Mr. Walker ascribes the crimes committed by some of these people to "grief, anger, despair and loneliness." These emotions would seem to be too universal to be singled out as incentives to crime. The author also blames poverty for the violence in his precinct, yet the recent criminological studies do not bear him out. When a man's face is slapped by another man whose wife he has insulted, is it poverty that moves him to return with a shotgun and blow them both to pieces? How much does a shotgun cost? In another case, a junkie steals a crimson wig belonging to someone's wife; the husband shoots the junkie with a bow and arrow, then slashes him repeatedly with a knife. Is that crimson wig the unmistakable emblem of poverty?

In fact, books are among the most successful products of the "inner city" ghettos. Claude Brown's "Man Child in the Promised Land" and some of James Baldwin's works are good examples. Now, in "Fort Apache," a police captain, Tom Walker, looks at the ghetto from the fire escape to speak. And we ought to be grateful that he does, for the ghetto should also be seen from the point of view of this other group that suffers in it: the police, the public servants. Tom Walker had been a policeman for 15 years when he was promoted to lieutenant and assigned to the 41st Precinct in the South Bronx. But while he knew that this was the most violent precinct in the city, he was not prepared for the reception he got. As he approached the entrance to the stationhouse, a police officer was talking to two men in the doorway. Suddenly, the patrolman fell against Mr. Walker and, as they tumbled to the floor, the author realized he was sticky with someone else's blood.

One That Got Away

One of the men was armed with an iron pipe, the other had a knife. Mr. Walker and the patrolman managed to subdue and capture the pipe wielder, but the other got away. Later, when his first tour of duty was over, the rookie lieutenant walked around the corner to where his car was parked and discovered that all four tires had been stolen. There will be readers who will question the "objectivity" of "Fort Apache." This is only natural—as natural as questioning the objectivity of the books written by the inhabitants, or former inhabitants, of the ghettos. It is to Mr. Walker's credit that he is not "angry," a priori, at the people in his precinct. He is angry only when they hurt his men or an innocent victim, and, unlike other ghetto authors, he keeps

Mr. Walker commiserates with a man in the violent gangs of the South Bronx because "they have no other place to go"—but it is necessary to point out that a violent environment does not create itself. It is not historically inevitable, as the distorted vestigial Marxism of some social thinkers tends to see it. One might even play the devil's advocate and conjecture that there are some who are morbidly fascinated by the ghetto as it is, who find in it a fantasy release for outlawed emotions. In book form, at least, many readers prefer the ghetto to the "boredom" and allegedly meaningless social rituals of the suburbs. Even Mr. Walker, who has now been promoted out of the 41st Precinct, says, "It was horrible, it was poignant, it was funny, and it was sad, but most of all it was real." Perhaps all social reforms ought to begin by defining "the real."

Senate Endorses Detente

Based on U.S. Arms Might

WASHINGTON, May 5 (AP)—The Senate today adopted a resolution favoring continuation of detente with the Soviet Union based on "unchallengable" United States military strength. The resolution, adopted 86 to 7, was rewritten to meet views of critics of the Soviet Union after it had become apparent that an earlier version would fail. By a 92 to 1 vote, the Senate approved an amendment calling for removal of Soviet-backed Cuban troops from Africa. It also unanimously endorsed a provision asserting that the United States should not be prevented in future arms limitation agreements "from achieving and maintaining parity with the Soviet Union in the area of offensive nuclear weapons." Both amendments were sponsored by James B. Allen, Democrat of Alabama.

Indiana's Verdict

For the first time in many months, it becomes distinctly possible to envisage the Republican Party denying its nomination to President Ford. Although Ronald Reagan won narrowly in Indiana, the pattern of his victory makes the outlook ominous for the President in most of the remaining primaries.

The two rivals ran about even in normally Republican areas but Mr. Reagan did decisively better among independents and among those Democrats who consider themselves political orphans since the demise of Gov. George C. Wallace's candidacy. The same crossover voting by Wallaceite Democrats is possible in several forthcoming primary states such as Arkansas, Tennessee, and—with the greatest potential for embarrassment—in the President's home state of Michigan. A defeat there on May 18 would be a tremendous blow to Mr. Ford's prestige.

A second unfavorable omen for Mr. Ford is the geographic location of most of the remaining primaries. The Northeast and the industrialized Middle West, the two regions where the President is strongest, have already chosen most of their delegates. Aside from Michigan, only Ohio, New Jersey and Rhode Island remain to vote. Otherwise, the candidates fight it out in a dozen Southern, border, and Western states where Mr. Reagan can be expected to do well.

The climax comes in California on June 8, when 167 delegates are elected on a winner-take-all basis. Unless one candidate or the other slumps badly in the intervening weeks, the big California primary may well decide the outcome as it did in the Rockefeller-Goldwater struggle in 1964.

The intensifying battle for the nomination has high risks for the Republican Party in November. If either candidate had effectively dominated the primaries up to this point, there would be time for the winner to make peace with the loser and for emotions to subside. Instead, the clash is unresolved and beginning to turn faintly bitter.

President Ford's campaign manager attributed the Indiana verdict, in part, to Mr. Reagan's "demagogic statements." White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen accused Mr. Reagan's organization of circumventing the campaign finance law. The G.O.P. survived much worse recriminations during the Taft-Eisenhower battle of 1952 and went on to win; but neither candidate this year is in General Eisenhower's class as a political miracle-maker.

Freeing Campaign Funds

After inexcusable delays that had more to do with politics than reform, Congress has sent President Ford its revised version of the campaign finance law. It is not an ideal piece of legislation; among other deficiencies, it reduces the independence of the Federal Election Commission, restoring too much control over the regulations to Congress itself—that is, to the body least equipped to deal objectively with the elective process.

Nevertheless, it is a bill that demands speedy approval by the President. Even at best, the reconstituted commission will be unable to renew the flow of Federal funds to Presidential candidates until its members are appointed, confirmed by the Senate and sworn in. Every day's delay makes it that much more difficult for candidates—Ronald Reagan, for example—to meet the financial demands of a campaign in which they had every right to count on Federal contributions according to formulas that were approved by Congress last year only to have them cut off when the Supreme Court found a flaw in the way the commission had been appointed.

Although President Ford rightly urged Congress to confine itself to such changes as the Court required, it would be unthinkable for him now to veto the measure as revised. As the incumbent, his advantages over other candidates, especially his Republican rival, are glaring enough in any case; they become intolerable when he can leave them stranded without the matching funds they need to get around the country while he enjoys interest-free credit from the United States Government and commercial airlines for his own political barnstorming.

It is not always easy to distinguish between a President's campaigning and the travel he does in the course of official duties. The longer Mr. Ford takes to restore the flow of campaign funds to his opponents, the more vulnerable he will be to the charge, however unfounded, that he is taking unfair advantage of his position.

Bicentennial Follies

When the People's Bicentennial Commission initially appeared to be taking aim at some of the more commercial and hypocritical manifestations of the nation's 200th anniversary observance, such puncturing of stuffed-shirt chauvinism did not seem a "bad idea. But the P.B.C.'s lofty proclamations about a "reaffirmation of the principles of democracy" have long since been superseded by sophomoric pranks.

More recently, P.C.B.'s transparent anti-capitalist bias has led it to resort to dangerously dirty tricks. The group has addressed a form letter to 10,000 secretaries of corporate executives, offering a $25,000 reward to any recipient who provides "concrete information that leads directly to the arrest, prosecution, conviction and imprisonment of a chief executive officer . . . for criminal activity relating to corporate operations."

Thus this pseudo-liberal organization has now stooped to that oldest of totalitarian subversions—the organizing of internal spy systems in family, business or community. It is easy to imagine its own outraged reaction to such an appeal had it been made, even in half-jest, by a conservative group as a means of focusing attention on alleged radical wrongdoing within established institutions.

Whether it made its offer with tongue in cheek or not, the P.C.B. has now totally destroyed whatever credibility it had left as social critic of the Bicentennial. Which is too bad, as there's plenty left to criticize.

Building Strike

The tenants and resident owners of more than 2,500 apartment houses affected by the striking building employees union face mounting inconvenience and increasing health and safety hazards as the talks between the union and the landlords' negotiating committee remain deadlocked. Mayor Beame has appropriately pointed to the serious hardship imposed by the walkout, particularly on the aged, disabled and sick. This warning appears at least to have led to an agreement by both parties to go back to the bargaining table today.

From the start of negotiations, both union and real estate interests have confronted each other with an intransigence born of extreme positions. The issues are rendered more complex by the wide range in the owners' economic position, the substantial difference of interests among cooperatives, luxury rental apartments and rent-controlled units. Union militancy is undoubtedly intensified by corresponding militancy among the landlords of rent-controlled and rent-stabilized apartments, who are using the dispute as one more weapon in the war against rent controls.

The strike's disruptive and potentially dangerous effects have been compounded by the refusal of city sanitation workers to pick up garbage from struck buildings even where tenants have placed the bags near the curb well outside the picketline. Apparently determined to flaunt the municipal service unions' view that service to the citizens comes last, sanitationmen have stretched labor solidarity beyond the strike's confines—and beyond reason.

City Hall thus far has not been able to marshal its courage other than to make an arrangement with John DeLury, head of the Uniformed Sanitationmen's Association, to allow his members to remove large accumulations of garbage if and only if they have been "certified" as a hazard by Health Department inspectors.

In view of the situation's complexity, its growing risks, and the dim prospect of reaching agreement in the renewed talks, the only promise of a speedy end to this disruptive strike would be by submission of the issues to fact-finding and arbitration. Such a course would not only benefit the public but also help the moderate elements on each side to avoid becoming hostages of militant special interests.

Convention Center

The Regional Plan Association is correct in saying that new construction could turn Times Square around, but a convention center is the wrong construction. The long-planned Portman Hotel is the kind of new building the area needs, not a three-square-block monolith, which is what even the best-designed convention center will be. The variety of shops, restaurants and new theaters in the hotel plan would infuse the right mix of activities into the area, in the kind of lively building complex that would enhance rather than deaden the street and its surroundings. The idea is to upgrade Times Square, not destroy it.

The second site suggested, in the Forties from Seventh Avenue to the Avenue of the Americas, is much too close to Fifth Avenue, which needs nothing of this ponderous, oversized lifelessness only a block away from the pedestrian scale and elegance that are its salient features. Convenience, in this case, could be sabotage. At best, a convention center is an inert blockbuster, with traffic. That is why a convention center scheme for London's Covent Garden—also its theater district—was wisely abandoned.

The two things wrong with the present proposals are their surprising insensitivity to urban design and the expense and trouble of condemnation proceedings that would be required. City officials have already scored the cost and impracticality of clearing the sites. A rival proposal for the 34th Street railyards on the Hudson River would use open, available land, with space for a waterfront plaza, expansion, or commercial construction. That site is close enough to midtown to benefit from its existing facilities, with potential revitalizing activity over a twenty-block area. It is still the best convention center area in Manhattan.

British Cheer

Not for a long time has there been good economic news out of Britain. The pay deal between the Trades Union Congress and Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey represents a major triumph for financial good sense, and brightens the prospect for genuine reversal of Britain's economic decline.

By vote of 25 to 5, the general council of the T.U.C. agreed yesterday to a wage ceiling of 4.5 percent on the general national pay scale, in return for tax concessions which could have the effect of a further significant increase in the average worker's take-home pay. The labor force stands to benefit in real terms, therefore, not only from fatter pay envelopes but from the prospect of an easing in Britain's ruinous double-digit inflation, which has been the highest of all the Western European industrial nations.

Mr. Healey bargained skillfully on this combination package, making it clear that if labor insisted on a higher wage ceiling, the excess would be taxed away. Considering the parliamentary strength of the moderates in the Labor Party, who might well have been joined by the Liberals on this issue, Mr. Healey's threat of equalizing through tax policy could hardly be called an empty one.

Prime Minister Callaghan's new Government can take immense satisfaction in winning the cooperation of the leaders of the labor movement for this opening step toward the goal of stable growth.

Of Southern Africa and U.S. Policy

The recent U.S. attempt to impose our ideals of government on a certain Southeast Asian nation came to grief. Economic, political and cultural conditions in that nation are not similar to our own. Neither the leading people in the U.S. Government nor the average U.S. citizen had anything in their experience qualifying them to judge what was right for the people of that nation.

Some of us may have drawn the conclusion from this experience that intervention in the affairs of others without a very high degree of mutual understanding is meddling, and is bound to fail, even though the intervention is undertaken with the best of intentions.

Dr. Kissinger would now launch the U.S. on a new attempt to impose our ideals of government on another nation. Again this new target of our good intentions is economically, politically and culturally a very different nation from our own. Is there really any more basis for our assuming that we know what is best for the Rhodesians than there was for our assumption that we knew what was best for the Vietnamese? DAVID K. TOWNSEND
New York, April 29, 1976

The Secretary of State Kissinger and the United States ought to be congratulated for at long last announcing a policy favoring majority rule, political independence, economic development, racial equality and human dignity in southern Africa.

Of course, here in the United States this policy had long been urged on the Government by black Americans and progressive whites. A notable example of this was the Council on African Affairs, 1937-1955, led by such dedicated and distinguished black Americans as Paul Robeson, W.E.B. DuBois, W. Alpheus Hinton, Estelle Osborne, Louise Patterson and Max Yergan (that is, before he became reactionary and defected from the cause in 1948). For their efforts to persuade the United States to seek to promote democracy in Africa as well as at home, these men were vilified and persecuted during the McCarthy era, when the politics of fear and repression prevailed. And since World War II the U.S. stance and action in southern Africa has largely been in favor of big business and white racist interests.

It is regrettable that Kissinger's new policy derived very largely from a realistic ad hoc reaction to the Soviet Union's action and goals in southern Africa, but it is to be hoped that it would be carried out purposefully and so vindicate the long efforts of progressive Americans, black and white, as well as Africans themselves, who had had consistently urged such an enlightened policy.

SUNY's $23,000 Job

I notice in The Times of April 25 that the State University of New York at Stony Brook is advertising for an "affirmative-action officer," who will be "responsible for recommending, developing, implementing [sic] University policies, programs in Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity." Candidates for this post will need to show "ability in administration, communication, interpretation of regulations, [and] statistical data," and they must have had academic training at the "master's level or equivalent." The salary range "starts at $23,000."

State University budget restrictions being what they are, how many new posts will be opening in the near future for the affirmative-action officer to see filled in an "affirmative" way?

But let us suppose it will be possible to hire a scant handful of assistant professors in the humanities. The starting salary for an assistant professor of English or history or philosophy—a job for which the Ph.D. degree is a necessary qualification—is just over half the starting salary offered to the prospective affirmative-action officer. Do these salaries reflect the priorities of the State University of New York? Do they reflect the priorities of the taxpayers of the State of New York? Do the voters of New York endorse the Federal regulations ultimately responsible for such nonsense? MYRON MAGNET

Malpractice: Carey's Realistic Program

As vice chairman of the McGill Commission on Medical Malpractice, I feel compelled to respond to your April 19 editorial which criticized Governor Carey's medical malpractice program as inadequate and bearing little relationship to the McGill Commission recommendations. Dr. McGill concurs in the comments that follow.

Your characterization of the Governor's program is grossly inaccurate and, unless refuted, will create a false impression among your readers as to the true extent of the Governor's support for the commission he created.

First, your readers should know that the Governor adopted, and included in his program, eleven of the seventeen legislative and administrative recommendations made by the commission. You referred to three legislative proposals adopted by the Governor, namely, the limitation of attorneys' fees, itemization of awards and the prohibition of the ad damnum clause in medical malpractice cases, but failed to mention his proposals to require insurance coverage for second medical opinions on the need for surgery; increase the malpractice insurance coverage available to hospitals from $3 million to $10 million, and make the new Medical Malpractice Insurance Association more responsive.

Furthermore, you omitted any mention of the significant administrative recommendations made by the commission, all of which have been adopted and acted upon by the Governor. These recommendations deal with a wide range of medical malpractice related issues, including continuing education for doctors, injury prevention programs in hospitals, more effective discipline of negligent doctors, the accumulation of accurate medical injury data for use in the ongoing study of medical malpractice and a broad expansion of professional review of the quality and cost of health care in this state.

In addition, the Governor's message to the Legislature makes it clear that the recommendations of the McGill Commission not included in his 1976 program have not been rejected and will be the subject of further study by an executive commission established by the Governor for that purpose.

As to collateral sources received by a plaintiff in a medical malpractice case, specifically mentioned in your editorial, legislation enacted last year at the Governor's request already allows juries to consider collateral sources in arriving at an award.

The Governor's program is a realistic appraisal of what can be accomplished at the legislative session immediately following the commission's report and, if enacted, will significantly advance our joint effort to solve the complex medical malpractice problem. HERBERT TENNER

Medical Series: The Contrary Views

Before the record closes on your five-part medical series, [Jan. 26-30], one important point should be made: The A.M.A. is not alone in disputing many of your facts, assumptions and conclusions.

Samples of authoritative, contrary views:

It is not necessary for me to challenge the inappropriate calculations and extrapolations in these articles."

Anti-Soviet Terror

The Wrong Support

Those who think that the terrorism against the Soviet representatives abroad are helping Jews or the fighters for human rights in U.S.S.R. are sadly mistaken. Contrary, their activities are in the hands of those who are the human, national and rights and liberties of Soviet. The terror against Soviet representatives only serves in the weak arguments in the anti-campaign and warns up the Semitic spirits of those who have been dreaming of words to deeds for a long time, such acts of terrorism in awkward position our since without whose support would be even more difficult.

The organizers and executors of terrorism must know that in U.S.S.R. we are asserting law and justice are on our side those who suppress human rights sort to lawlessness, arbitrariness, terror. Our strength is in moral fastness and refusal to compromise. This strength is mightier than I have been seeking to do. Israel for more than five years I can declare sincerely that pioneers of our movement have sort to such methods as fighting the border, their actions did not step limits of their personal ability. But they acted with fear. They declared openly and publicly it was their right to leave and they began their efforts to realization of this right were grounds. As a result, emigration now become a serious factor of life in Soviet Union.

The struggle of Soviet Jews as other people in U.S.S.R. who fighting for justice needs internal support. We receive and welcome support, but we reject terror.

Toward 'Socialized War'

The recent letter of Roland Bainton (April 28) suggested that our race is economically and ecologically suicidal. But it is entirely sistent with American capitalist practice this ultimate in competition. The goal of our competitive system seems to be to go merrily on oblivious of the environment, regarding how much power is created and what waste is created. Great machines in absolute competition, Russia; so what if it requires megawatt power from the atom and leads to final waste of the world? The Russian on the other hand, seem to be sistent with their own philosophy. Should not they be striving for socialized war? ROBERT E. MURPHY sense, than for Congress to abdicate its function and let the Executive accumulate uncontrolled power—secret power worst of all. That is not an abstract judgment but the inescapable lesson of recent history. The abuses that mounted in the absence of oversight eventually exploded in Watergate and the intelligence scandal, shaking public confidence. That is the opposite of a conservative course.

A true conservative in the Ford Administration, Attorney General Levi, understands what is at stake in the intelligence area. He has his differences with the Church committee; he remains too awed by the label "national security." But he has taken significant steps himself to prevent domestic intelligence abuses, and he favors Congressional action. He is committed to the principle that official conduct must conform to standards of law.

The C.I.A. itself has accepted the idea of effective Congressional oversight. William E. Colby, the former director, wrote last January, "This year's excitement has made clear that the rule of law applies to all parts of the American Government, including intelligence. In fact, this will strengthen American intelligence."

But the decision on whether to create an effective oversight committee is up to the Senate alone. There, an important part will be played by the Democratic whip, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who has been helpful to the Church committee in the past but lately has opposed the oversight reform.

Senator Byrd doubtless wants to hold the support of the old committee barons in his campaign for majority leader, but his use of this issue could be shortsighted. He is also respected for his intelligence and mastery of Senate business. What he may need to show some colleagues is an eye for larger interests—the Senate's and the country's. A fair symbol is the Senate's willingness to exercise this constitutional responsibility.

The Church committee has been criticized for backwardness in public relations—for failing to keep the issue of intelligence reform alive by frequent dramatic revelations. Well, its final report is indeed a sober piece of work, an enormous record of unpleasant facts presented without hyperbole. Is the Senate really prepared to brush it off as insufficiently trendy?

The Watergate experience revived faith in our constitutional system. It dealt with one symptom of an illness, the long slide to uncontrolled Executive power. The Senate has a chance now to deal with the disease itself, and its decision will tell us a good deal about whether our renewed faith is justified.

A Judge Judges Family Court

Following is the text of a letter of resignation sent to Mayor Beame by Simeon Golar, a Family Court judge, on Tuesday.

By Simeon Golar

With mixed feelings, I tender my resignation as a judge of the Family Court, effective May 14, 1976. I plan to return to the practice of law. I also expect to be active in public affairs and politics as I have been in the past.

When I was appointed by Mayor Lindsay to the Family Court, in December of 1973, I looked forward to the satisfaction of serving families and children. But, frankly, I have been disappointed. I suspect that the city's continuing fiscal emergency has diminished your enjoyment of your job as well, and I have sympathized with you as you have been obliged to take actions which must have been very difficult and painful for you.

New York City's money problems have greatly affected the Family Court. During a period of recession, with increased unemployment, delinquency and family problems, when the caseload of the court has been greatly enlarged, the important and difficult work of the court has been rendered even more difficult by staff and budget reductions, and by the large number of unfilled vacancies on the Family Court bench.

With all of this, in recent months, sitting in an Intake Part in Queens, I have on many days heard more than 125 cases—with an average of less than three minutes per case! Certainly a judge needs more time than a moment or two to decide whether to take away a mother's child, or to have a man arrested or imprisoned for non-support, or to remand someone for psychiatric examination. And certainly those who appear before the court, and the entire public, are entitled to better than this.

Perhaps the Family Court's greatest failing is in the area of juvenile delinquency. It may be that our juvenile justice system was flawed from its beginning at the turn of the century, premised as it was on the notion that all antisocial behavior engaged in by children is pathology, which is treatable.

Faithful to the original scheme, the New York State Family Court Act mandates "treatment" for adjudicated delinquents, precludes punishment, and takes no account of the seriousness of the offending act. Thus, a boy may deface a subway car, or he may commit armed robbery, and the most the court can "find" in either case is that he is a juvenile delinquent. And if the court sends him to a State Training School, he is often released in a month or two.

One can make a rational case for punishment, and one can make a nobler case for rehabilitation. But what we clearly cannot justify is accomplishing neither. I have been especially pained to be part of a system that neither provides salutary punishment for delinquent juveniles nor offers any hope for effective rehabilitation.

And my anguish has been compounded by the awareness that often the court inculcates in youngsters a contempt and scorn for the law, as they are brought before it to have absolutely nothing happen, except their having perhaps learned the lesson that with delay and a state-paid lawyer they can easily beat the system. Thus, daily, we "graduate" juveniles to the adult criminal courts and lives of crime.

It may be that the greatest contribution juvenile courts have made in America's cities for three generations has been to divert the occasionally delinquent sons and daughters of the immigrant poor from the adult criminal courts and jails. Happily, they were often returned to communities where schools, settlement houses, churches and synagogues, and lay and religious leadership provided opportunities for them to learn skills and good citizenship. And many prospered and led good lives.

Today, in New York City and elsewhere, we have abandoned the urban poor and their young (who now happen to be largely black and Spanish-speaking). Our schools fail to teach large numbers useful skills, and they drop out and, without jobs, learn to survive by hustling on our city's streets.

Mr. Mayor, you have been properly concerned with our threatened default on our bonds and notes, but I hope that you will also raise your voice against our defaulting as a great city upon our historic social and moral obligations—particularly those special obligations we have honored in the past to the poor and to the young.

I know that you will continue to do your very best as our Mayor, and for that I am grateful.

Medical-News Reports

By Louis Lasagna

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The public is repeatedly exposed to statistics about medical care. The news is usually bad, rarely encouraging or reassuring. The public is more concerned with the harm that currently available prescribed drugs may cause it than with the harm that lies in the absence of better drugs.

In this context, consider some news stories.

Item: The New England Journal of Medicine published an article about the results of a test assessing physicians' knowledge about antibiotics in which the writers concluded that the doctors were deficient. It was promptly picked up by the news media, and the lay reader once again heard that doctors were prescribing badly. What are the facts?

To start, the test was really designed to provide self-assessment for the takers and a learning experience. As Harold C. Neu and Sara P. Howrey, the writers, have said, "It was not a definitive study of the ability of United States physicians to use antibiotics properly."

Second, while much was made of the fact that the 4,513 doctors who took it scored an average of 68 percent right, the 29 infectious-disease experts who took it averaged only 83 percent!

Third, some experts who have taken the test disagree with at least a few of the "correct" answers.

Fourth, each question allowed only five seconds for an answer. (Even the busiest doctor can spare more than five seconds for a decision on drug prescribing.)

Fifth, some of the questions dealt with rare conditions whose treatment need not be at the fingertips of every doctor. (I'd rather have a doctor look up the right drug than guess wrong.)

Item: The public is often told how expensive drugs are, and how greatly one could reduce the national health bill by cutting down on drug use. What are the facts? At my own hospital in Rochester, the average drug charge at discharge from the hospital is 3.5 percent of the total hospital bill, and over one-half of that is to pay for our pharmacy's operating costs! Anyone hoping to cut Blue Cross-Blue Shield costs had better look elsewhere for major savings.

Item: The Congressional Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation concluded in 1974 that 2.8 million surgical procedures per year were needlessly performed in the United States, with a consequent 11,900 deaths.

The New York Times on Jan. 27,

1976, estimated that 938 patients subjected to gall-bladder surgery in 1975 were the victims of "avoidable deaths." Is it not strange, then, that the distinguished gastroenterologist editor of The New England Journal of Medicine, on whose pages the statistics first appeared, estimated that the number of avoidable deaths was 113? Estimates that vary by a factor of ten suggest either gross error or puffery.

Item: In 1974, a book titled "Fifty Profits, and Politics" appeared. Its authors estimated that in 1972 at least $14 billion or approximately 19 percent of all health care expenditures were for drugs. But the Social Security Bulletin for February 1976 states that in fiscal 1975, three years (and a lot of inflation) later, $10.6 billion was spent for "drugs and drug sundries" (although this admittedly excludes drugs provided in hospitals).

When questioned about his estimate, one of the authors of the book admitted that his figures included not only "packaged medications" but "also certain other products which make health claims . . . such as medicated soaps, antacids, dentifrices, and the like . . . and which, accordingly, are considered drugs" by the Food and Drug Administration. Toothpaste a drug?

Item: An article appears in the British Medical Journal reporting that older women on oral contraceptives who have risk factors (such as hypertension and diabetes) may be more prone to heart attacks than such women not on the pill. The F.D.A. decides to tell doctors that all older women on the pill are at greater risk, and are presumably therefore to be discouraged from its use.

One of the authors protests that this is not what his data show and points out that the British have not taken any such step, although it was British women who were studied.

How can the public guard itself against health statistics that are premature, exaggerated or patently false? The burden must start with the source of the data, to be both accurate as to his facts and circumspect as to his conclusions and generalizations. But the science writer, too, has an important role to play.

Professional journalistic competence and honesty should involve checking of facts and the soliciting of critical evaluation so that a balanced story results. Finally, the reader must learn to read his newspaper or listen to television coverage with a degree of criticism and skepticism that is proportional to his past experience with being misled by bad reporting.

the amalgam of libertarians and affirmarians who are helping to form the New Right—and who are taking the lead in both parties.

As the ghostly Goldwater and Rockefeller ships pass in the night, washed up and brought close by the wave of the past, what must the two captains be thinking?

Mr. Goldwater must be thinking that the main qualification for the Presidency has more to do with personal character than ideology, and that the nation is best served by an honest and stalwart human being like Gerald Ford.

Mr. Rockefeller must be thinking the forces that frustrated him all his life, albeit now behind a different leader, are inexorably rising again; with Mr. Ford, he has a President who will at least reverse the Rockefeller-Kissinger complex.

Many Republicans who hollered for one or the other's blood in times past resent and reject the plea from crippled ex-gladiators to cancel this year's spectacle in the convention arena. But there is something Kiplingque about the way time and chance take the edge off old enmities—how two strong men can be twain that meet, though they came from the ends of the spectrum.

Who'd a thunk it: The former "Mr. Conservative" in all his irascible ingenuousness, and the former "Mr. Mainstream" in all his engaging arrogance, together at last, murmuring sweet nothing-doings, walking arm in arm off into their political sunset.

Toward a healthier economic climate 4.

Social mobility or class warfare?

The economic confusions of millions of Americans—especially the educated, concerned members of the middle class, who exert great influence on public policy—are frustrating their efforts to make this a country of growing opportunity for all our people.

In fact, their economic misunderstanding threatens to diminish the opportunity for social progress and better living standards for those still enduring second-class citizenship of one sort or another. Because the one thing worse than not knowing something is knowing things that aren't so.

The need for understanding

We don't mean to offend you, but we feel keenly that there is a desperate need for people to understand better the economic system that makes our country tick—even in a recession—and underpins the highest living standards of any major country. This is not to say that those of us in industry are all that smart either; we make mistakes, too. But we are now deeply concerned, as the handwriting on the wall becomes clearer by the day, we'd like to share these concerns, and what we have learned, with you.

In real economic growth—the growth rate after you subtract the inflation—the United States ranked 17th among the 20 most advanced economies in the Free World during the 1960s. We were tied with Ireland and behind such nations as Iceland, Austria, Greece, Portugal, and Yugoslavia.

What caused our country's deplorable slow rate of growth? A major factor: not enough money invested in new plants and equipment.

The record since 1960

Since 1960 the United States has had the lowest level of private capital investment in relation to Gross National Product (GNP) of any major industrialized nation in the Free World. U.S. business investment averaged a shade over 13.5% of GNP in the period 1960-73. Japan's figure was more than twice ours. In West Germany it was 20%; in France, over 18%.

As a direct result, the American labor force's productivity is growing much more slowly than that of most of the countries with which the U.S. competes in world markets. Productivity, the measure of output per hour worked, is the key to improving living standards.

What's likely to happen if our economy more or less stagnates instead of grows?

If it becomes clear to everyone that the economic pie isn't going to get appreciably bigger, every group will begin fighting for a larger piece of that static pie. Women, blacks and other racial minorities, and young people of all backgrounds will be the hardest hit. College graduates will find job-hunting even tougher. More and more of them will have to take jobs lower in the economic scale. This will further squeeze every minority and everybody else.

Rising social strife can create a backlash against efforts toward cleaner air and water and toward the funding of health services and education. It can produce pressure to push older workers out early.

Corporate earnings must rise

If we as a people are to avoid such divisive bitterness, we are going to have to put some of our emotional hang-ups aside and face up to facts. The belief that business has prospered in recent years while individuals have suffered simply is not true. The evidence on this is incontrovertible. What a lot of people find difficult to swallow is that corporate earnings have to rise to levels substantially above those of recent years if our country is not to get into even deeper trouble.

Government obviously has a decisive role to play in promoting economic growth. Only government can formulate economic policy. Only government can disavow the adversary position that politicians have created with respect to private business, and replace it with a more responsible and productive relationship. Only government can create a healthier economic climate—though it cannot operate a business efficiently.

Economic growth is the last, best hope for the poor and for all the rest of us. Sheer redistribution of income cannot do the job. We must create a steadily larger income pie. This can be done only through economic growth. And only profitable private businesses can make the capital investments that produce economic growth and jobs and tax revenues.

MOYNIHAN'S MOVE EXPECTED IN JUNE

Meetings With Politicians Paving Way for Entrance Into Race for Senate

By FRANK LYNN

Daniel P. Moynihan is expected to announce his candidacy for the United States Senate early next month after spending most of this month conferring with New York politicians and otherwise laying the groundwork for his move.

"It looks to me like he is going to run; I don't know what could stop it," said a Moynihan adviser.

"He said he would be appreciative of my support," said a leading Democrat who met with Mr. Moynihan at the latter's request this week.

Mr. Moynihan was reached in Cleveland, where he had a speaking engagement yesterday. Asked about his candidacy, he said, "I have not made any announcement and that's that." He conceded, however, that he had been and would be "in town talking to people."

"My classes and my candidacy for Secretary of State finished last week, so I'm trying to figure some other way to get back on the payroll," said Mr. Moynihan facetiously. He is not due back in his Harvard classes until Oct. 1. He was also a leading foreign policy adviser to Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat of Washington, who ended his active Presidential campaign last week.

Mr. Moynihan, the former United States representative at the United Nations, would be the seventh candidate for the Democratic nomination to oppose Senator James L. Buckley, the Conservative-Republican incumbent.

5 Contenders Announced

Five contenders have already announced — former Attorney General Ramsey Clark; the City Council President, Paul O'Dwyer; Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein of Manhattan; Mayor Edward Hanna of Utica and Abraham Hirschfeld, a businessman.

Representative Bella S. Abzug of Manhattan has already acquired a campaign headquarters and a campaign manager and is expected to announce in mid-May.

Two other potential candidates — Representative Mario Biaggi of the Bronx and City Councilman Robert F. Wagner Jr. of Manhattan — expressed substantial doubt about their candidacies because of Mr. Moynihan's expected run.

Noting that it would be difficult to gain exposure in a crowded field, and assuming that Mr. Moynihan would run, Mr. Wagner said: "My sense is that I'm not going in."

Mr. Biaggi, who would be competing with Mr. Moynihan for the center and right side of the Democratic spectrum, said that "there is no point in both of us going."

Mr. Biaggi said that he and Mr. Moynihan fenced with each other over possible Senate candidacies at appearances last weekend. "He asked me and I asked him," said Mr. Biaggi.

Strong Hints Given

Like Macy's and Gimbels, Mr. Moynihan did not tell Mr. Biaggi, but he has strongly hinted to other Democrats that he is running.

He will not seek the endorsement of the liberal New Democratic Coalition — which he is highly unlikely to get anyway — and may even pass up a bid for the Democratic state committee's endorsement, according to advisers, even though many of the state's Democratic county leaders, including most of the New York City leaders, view him as "the best of a bad lot" and the Democrat most likely to defeat Senator Buckley.

The outspoken Mr. Moynihan, who could rival Mrs. Abzug in verbosity, wants to avoid being tagged the candidate of "the bosses." A Moynihan adviser said that the politically ecumenical Mr. Moynihan, who has served in the last four Democratic and Republican national administrations, had started laying out the themes of his campaign in a speech before the American Newspaper Publishers Association last Monday and in scheduled commencement addresses at Harvard, Ohio State and St. Anselm's College in New Hampshire.

In his speech before the publishers, Mr. Moynihan struck the positive note that the United States was not on the decline and should not be blamed for "what is wrong with the world."

The theme was similar to that of Senator Buckley and dissimilar to that of two of Mr. Moynihan's principal competitors on the left, Mr. Clark and Mrs. Abzug, who frequently criticize this nation's domestic and foreign policy.

Another likely bone of contention among the Democrats is the nation's defense budget, with Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Clark calling for massive cuts in military spending and Mr. Moynihan, a "hard-liner" and an admirer of Senator Jackson, presumably in favor of a strong military establishment.

Mr. Moynihan, however, still faces strenuous objections from black Democratic politicians who contend — and Mr. Moynihan denies — that he has been insensitive to racial problems.

Innovative Firm Puts Its Imprint On Philadelphia

By PAUL GOLDBERGER
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, May 5—Just in front of Independence Hall, a new glass and granite pavilion houses the Liberty Bell. Across Independence Mall a new museum, called the Living History Center, has just been opened. An appraisal of a 22-story skyscraper, a powerful form of glass and concrete, has just been finished behind Independence Hall. That this group of buildings exists is not so special. What is unusual is that they, and a great many more structures scattered about the rest of the Philadelphia area, were designed by one of the nation's more innovative architectural firms.

The firm, Mitchell/Giurgola and Associates, has had the sort of impact on this city that is usually reserved for dreary commercial architecture firms—in fact, it has made its mark on Philadelphia in a way that no architects of serious quality have done on any city since Mies van der Rohe started building in Chicago.

Penn Mutual Tower near Independence Hall in Philadelphia.

Rethinking of Process
Mitchell/Giurgola's accomplishments were recognized today as the American Institute of Architects, meeting in convention in Philadelphia, presented the firm its annual Firm Award, the highest accolade presented to a large office. The award represents a peace offering of sorts from the A.I.A. In 1968, after its design for the new A.I.A. headquarters in Washington was rejected by the Washington Fine Arts Commission as too radical, the A.I.A. did not defend Mitchell/Giurgola and the firm resigned the commission.

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1976

The Major Events of the Day

International
Egypt and the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization are reported to have reached a broad understanding for cooperation in Lebanon and elsewhere ending nine months of bitterly strained relations. The main purpose, according to sources close to Yasir Arafat, the P.L.O. leader, is to strengthen his hand against what they call "a Syrian attempt to bring the Palestinian resistance movement in Lebanon under the control of Damascus." Informed Arab officials said that Saudi Arabia, which has been mediating other Arab quarrels, helped smooth the Egyptian-P.L.O. relationship. [Page 1, Column 1.]
Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer and the head of the Trades Union Congress agreed on a tough new wage-control policy. Their unusual alliance has been tightened by a common anxiety over the fall of the pound and the continuing high inflation rate. The agreement restricts wage increases to 4.5 percent in the year starting Aug. 1 and sets a maximum increase of $7.32 for those earning more than $150 a week. [1:2.]
National
President Ford ordered a major review of his campaign strategy following four straight primary losses to Ronald Reagan. Proposals reportedly under consideration included dropping the public question-and-answer sessions that often put him on the defensive, and an attempt to picture his challenger as a dangerous reactionary race narrowed. As the Republican race narrowed, Jimmy Carter took a longer lead in the Democratic contest, with his strategists predicting a pre-convention delegate count big enough to win. [1:7-8.]
A growing split between the conservative and moderate wings of the Republican Party is indicated in The New York Times/CBS News survey of voters in the Indiana Republican primary. Despite previous warnings of this danger from President Ford's backers including Senator Barry Goldwater, the voters overwhelmingly rejected the idea that Mr. Reagan was splitting the party. But their own views showed a deep split along ideological lines. [1:7.]
The Senate failed by three votes to override President Ford's veto of a $125 million bill on child day care that would have helped the centers to mean long-unmanned staffing

Varied Assignments

Mitchell/Giurgola's much-acclaimed headquarters for the United Fund of Philadelphia, completed in 1972, used concrete screens over glass in a similar sun-sensitive way. A highly articulated combination of glass and concrete has, in fact, become a trademark of the firm's work. It is obvious in Mitchell/Giurgola's greenhouse-like entrance to the subway at Eighth and Market Streets and in the William Penn High School here, among other projects.
Ronaldo Giurgola worked closely with Louis Kahn, and there can be no question that Kahn's influence was the genesis for his firm's approach. But Giurgola is a more pragmatic designer than Kahn was. He speaks, for example, of what he calls "the realism of the partial vision," the idea that no building is a perfect, finished object in itself, but merely a part of a greater landscape, and that dealing piece by piece with the problem of the overall landscape is more realistic than proposing a grandiose and total scheme.
Although Mr. Giurgola is the firm's chief theorist, his partner, Ehrman B. Mitchell Jr., is active in design as well. Together, they strike one of the most successful balances between serious design and pragmatic business-sense of any firm now practicing in the United States.
The Mitchell/Giurgola office is unusual in design as well. It is active in part because of its size—there are 65 employees—and in part because of the partners' division of labor. Mr. Mitchell is committed to Philadelphia, and heads an office here, while Mr. Giurgola runs an equal-sized branch in New York.

Anthony J. Grossi Dead; Led New Jersey P.U.C.

By ROBERT Mc G. THOMAS Jr.

Anthony J. Grossi, the powerful New Jersey Democrat who resigned last February as chairman of the State Board of Public Utility Commissioners, died yesterday at St. Joseph's Hospital in Paterson, N.J., after having been stricken with what was described as a massive heart attack. He was 70 years old and had suffered from a heart ailment for more than a decade.

Mr. Grossi's death came just hours before he was to have been honored at a testimonial dinner given by long-time supporters including Governor Byrne, who had stood by his upstate during a corruption controversy that developed during Mr. Grossi's two years as head of the P.U.C.

After citing his health in announcing his resignation, Mr. Grossi had delayed his scheduled departure from government for almost a year to combat charges of corruption in connection with a $20,000 investment he made in a garbage disposal company accused of defrauding Jersey City of nearly $10 million.

Mr. Grossi, who was born in Haskell, where his father had settled after emigrating from Italy, had lived in Passaic County all his life, building one of the state's most formidable political machines.

Mr. Grossi was survived by his wife, Ruth; a daughter, Patricia; and two brothers, Elmer and Joseph. The service is scheduled for Saturday morning at the Aquino Funeral Home on Union Avenue in Paterson.

Mr. Grossi had attributed his decision to give up his powerful Senate post to his heart ailment, which had played a dramatic role in the defeat of Governor Hughes's income-tax measure the year before. When the bill came before the Senate, Mr. Grossi, a staunch supporter, was hospitalized for open-heart surgery and the measure failed by a single vote.

Hayden B. Johnson

HAYDEN JOHNSON, PLANNER, 59, DEAD

Port Authority Official Held Many Civic Positions

Hayden B. Johnson, who retired recently as deputy director of planning and development for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, died Tuesday evening at his home in Port Washington, L.I. He was 59 years old.

Mr. Johnson was involved in the development of several major Port Authority facilities, including New York's consolidated passenger ship terminal.

Mr. Johnson joined the Port Authority staff in 1955 after having held several executive positions with the City of Poughkeepsie, N.Y. He was city manager from 1952 to 1955 and earlier had been executive director of the Tennessee State Planning Commission.

He was a graduate of Amherst College and held a master's degree in architecture from Columbia University.

At the Port Authority, in addition to working on the new passenger ship terminal that replaced a number of scattered and deteriorating piers, Mr. Johnson worked on mass transportation planning and on the development of the World Trade Center.

He was active in the Regional Plan Association and the developer of the Regional Planning Commission. Mr. Johnson was a director of the Citizens Housing and Planning Council of New York, a past president of the American Society of Planning Officials and a member of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials and the American Society for Public Administration.

He was a former vice president of the North Atlantic Ports Association and was a United States member of the executive committee of the International Federation for Housing and Planning.

Surviving are his wife, Jean; two daughters, Courtney Hayden and Hardy Elizabeth; and a brother, Dr. Duncan Johnson. A funeral service will be held at 10 A.M. tomorrow at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Port Washington.

William V. Lawrence 2d, a Westchester real-estate executive whose grandfather was the developer of Bronxville, died Tuesday at his home in Bedford, N.Y. He was 71 years old.

George Mintzer, Lawyer, Dies; Arbiter of Industrial Disputes

George J. Mintzer, a lawyer who was highly regarded by labor and industry as an impartial arbitrator over the last 38 years, died in his sleep Tuesday night at his home at 275 Central Park West. He was 77 years old.

Mr. Mintzer, who began practicing law nearly 55 years ago, had spent the day in his office at 528 Fifth Avenue completing an arbitration award.

He was especially known for his largely successful adjudication of disputes, ranging from the Ladies' garment workers industry to his arbitration of issues raised by laundry workers, blouse makers, longshoremen and printers.

Last October Mr. Mintzer was named to the Governor's Minimum Wage Board. He had served as counsel in 1951 to the board of inquiry for the New York-New Jersey Waterfront Commission and as chairman, in 1959, of the State Advisory Council on Employment and Unemployment Insurance.

Gen. Walther von Seydlitz Dies; Defied Hitler's Order on Retreat

By ALBIN KREBS

Gen. Walther von Seydlitz-Kurzbach, a controversial German Army officer who, as second in command at the Battle of Stalingrad in World War II, refused to retreat in defiance of Hitler's orders, died in Bremen on April 28, it was disclosed yesterday. He was 87 years old.

General von Seydlitz could probably be labeled an opportunist changing by most standards.

He joined the Nazi Party as an early supporter of Hitler, serving his secret membership to give the future dictator vital strategic information as early as 1931.

After his capture at Stalingrad, he became president of the Free Germany Committee in Moscow, formed by the Russians to conduct anti-Nazi propaganda.

After the war, he refused to cooperate with the Communists in the Soviet occupation zone in Germany.

General von Seydlitz finally wound up spending five years of a 25-year prison term following his war crimes conviction in 1955, then went to West Germany. There, he was formally accused of high treason, but the charges were later dropped. He died in obscurity.

Born in Hamburg, General von Seydlitz was career officer who was wounded four times in World War II. He is said to have joined the Nazi Party in 1929, despite the fact that his fellow officers, in the Reichwehr had for the most part, resisted Hitler until he came to power in 1933, and did not become party members until 1934.

With the outbreak of World War II, General von Seydlitz became an important commander in the Polish campaign, and it was said that he bore much of the responsibility for the deportation of 3,000 Jews from Krakow. He also served on the French front, as leader of the 12th Infantry Division in the German invasion.

Assigned to the Russian front with the German Sixth Army, General von Seydlitz was chief deputy to Field Marshal Friedrich von Paulus in the— for the Germans—catastrophic Battle of Stalingrad.

When it became clear to him in mid-January of 1943 that the Germans had walked into a trap set for them by the Russians, General von Seydlitz urged Marshal von Paulus to break out of the trap without informing Hitler of the plan. But Hitler had ordered the Wehrmacht not to retreat an inch, and Marshal von Paulus chose to act as instructed.

Misuse of U.S. Housing Aid?

ALAN S. OSER
 An unexpected and intruder, the city's plight has stepped housing theory and that is the clear intent of the city's request to the Federal Government to use the bulk of Section 8 housing subsidies to offset its possible its own contribution to public housing for low-income people is not what housing is had in mind when they knew that de- maintained housing re- some tenants could af-

New York Seeking to Divert Subsidies for Tenants

Severe administrative problems there were—and are. Across the country, little use has been made so far of Section 8 money, either for new construction or existing housing. But the new element in New York City was indicated in the remark of one housing official: "The city's premise is that we have certain functions no other city has, and we must unload them. One such burden is an annual contribution of $40 million to public housing. Last week the first angry manifestation of this policy burst forth. The Lefrak Organization announced its intention to phase out new construction and the qualifying tenants in the city. The city's Section 8 intentions, said Lefrak, were the "straw that broke the camel's back" after years of housing administration detrimental to the private sector. Encouraged by the city's Human Rights Commission, Lefrak had sought out and found about 300 white families that would have qualified for Section 8 aid and would have used the subsidy to move into Lefrak City in Queens as part of a total effort at racial stabilization there. Lefrak City had turned roughly 80 percent nonwhite. But if Section 8 money goes to city projects, that goal will be doomed.

Proposal Called 'Subversion'
 The Lefrak reaction is by no means isolated. The Settlement Housing Fund, for example, has denounced the city proposal to use most of the 1976-77 Section 8 allocation to subsidize 8,000 units of city-aided and state-aided public housing as "a subversion of the Congressional intent" in the 1974 Housing Act. The intent was to allow people to shop for better housing in the free market.

"If the city wants to bail out its own projects and assist tenants who now live in standard housing," said Clara Fox, executive director of the fund, "let it ask for special Section 8 'set asides' for these purposes."

Actually the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development is itself planning to use Section 8 funds to assist 110,000 of its own housing units across the country. The money is to go to federally insured projects that have gone into foreclosure and to projects that are "in trouble." As of February, 4.38 percent of all multifamily projects insured by the Federal Housing Administration were in default.

Some housing specialists are questioning whether the law allows the use of Section 8 money to aid projects. The city, in fact, is seeking a change in regulations to assure that funds are granted to specific projects, so that a subsidy would not "move with the tenant."

The idea of earmarking the Section 8 subsidy is to some housing specialists the only way to make practical use of a program that provides only a "drop in the bucket" in relation to need. To others, earmarking undercuts the entire concept embodied in Section 8 subsidies to "existing" housing.

In the entire city there are about 800,000 families whose rent-to-income ratio is above 25 percent, and 150,000 of them live in public housing. In the private sector alone, it would take about $225 million of Section 8 subsidies to bridge that gap fully for just the 400,000 units that might be assumed to qualify, according to Dr. George Sternlieb, director of the Center for Urban Policy Research at Rutgers University.

In fiscal 1975 the total Section 8 allocation to be used in the city was $75.2 million most of it is to be used for new and substantial rehabilitation, not existing housing. In the second year, the allocation has been in terms of units rather than dollars, but it probably comes to a cut of at least a third in dollars.

Thus, since funds are far below need here and nationally, the emphasis has shifted in H.U.D., it is said, to getting the most housing for the dollar—although no cost analysis has been made of how to do this.

City officials make the point that even if their request to H.U.D. is approved, there will still be Section 8 money for 2,000 units in the private sector. And they add that administratively it will be far easier to control the use of the funds if they are tied to specific projects. Ultimately the city hopes to qualify all 70,000 state and city-aided public housing projects under Section 8.

But even if the 1974 housing statute provides no barrier to using Section 8 specifically to ease government's own financial headaches in housing, no one suggests that this was Congressional intent. In the 1974 Housing Act, policymakers have moved a long way from the principle that Section 8 subsidies for existing housing should be used to let poor and moderate-income people shop for the best housing they can afford, provided they are willing to pay 25 percent of their income as rent.

Florence Podolsky on the balcony of her ninth-floor apartment in the Palisades

By WARREN HOGE
 Florence Podolsky looked out at the Hudson River from her ninth-floor apartment on the Palisades and reproached herself.

She said that recently people had been asking her about her view, people who knew something she didn't—that the largest flotilla of sailing ships to mention of the $35 cover the restaurant is extracting from guests that day.

And at the World Trade Center, perhaps the premier Upriver at Edgewater, James P. Dolan, catering director of the Binghamton restaurant, built on the former ferryboat of the same name, finds himself turning away proffered busloads of out-of-towners who he says "don't even blink" at mention of the $35 cover the restaurant is extracting from guests that day.

"We're encouraging all yacht clubs to have vessels go out and meet the ships and sail along for about an hour or so," said Frank O. Braynard, a longtime ship enthusiast from Sea Cliff, L.I., who is the general manager of Operation Sail.

The fleet will gather in Gravesend Bay off Brooklyn and at the Sandy Hook anchorage three miles off the Jersey coast. They will be greeted at Sandy Hook by Governor Byrne in a review vessel, then by hundreds of local craft bearing a special flag of admittance obtainable for $25 from Bill Robinson, Room 600, 50 West 44th Street, New York 10036.

The nautical parade steps off from the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge at 11 A.M. Sunday, July 4, journeying up the river to Spuyten Duyvil, two miles north of the George Washington Bridge, before dispersing around the port in late afternoon.

Spectator boats will be permitted to operate on either side of the 400-yard channel reserved for the show ships.

The Coast Guard anticipates 25,000 spectators on Governors Island.

Restaurant Associates is erecting 17,000 bleacher seats on the Battery Park City landfill site, with tickets including a box lunch, selling for $25. Part of the proceeds will go to Operation Sail.

Colgate-Palmolive is opening its waterfront building in Jersey City and erecting bleachers in an adjacent parking lot for its 1,700 employees and their families.

Mr. Braynard said "V.I.P.'s" would watch the parade from three merchant training ships of the states of New York, Massachusetts and Maine, two reserved Staten Island ferries and from the new West Side passenger terminal.

But the Operation Sail planners clearly hope for a massive outpouring of the less than very important persons. "By gory," Mr. Braynard said, slamming his fist into a wooden tabletop for emphasis, "we don't want this to be just for fat cats and yacht clubs."

Some Designated Sites For Viewing the Parade

Following is a list of sites thus far designated as public viewing areas for Operation Sail:

MANHATTAN: All shoreline, park areas from Battery Park to the top of the island. The West Side Highway and Henry Hudson Parkway will almost certainly be closed to traffic and open to spectators, except for structurally unsound portions south of 72d Street. Greenwich Village piers are not recommended because of obstructed views caused by the presence of review vessels.

STATEN ISLAND: The foot of Hylan Boulevard, Richmond Terrace from the St. George ferry terminal to St. Peter's Place, Von Briesen Park and Fort Wadsworth.

BROOKLYN: Verrazano-Narrows Bridge to the 89th Street pier, Brooklyn Heights promenade and the shoreline from Fort Hamilton Parkway to Bay Parkway.

NEW JERSEY: Liberty State Park and the foot of Exchange Place, Johnston Avenue and Pavonia Avenue.

HOBOKEN: Lower campus of Stevens Institute. Also designated are Fort Lee, Englewood Cliffs and Palisades Interstate Park.

Other Jersey waterfront communities have not yet completed plans for accommodating members of the public. Binoculars are recommended at all sites.

viewing site of all, harried officials respond with variants of "ask me next week" to the welter of requests from tenants wanting to open their offices to outsiders that day.

The ships will first heave into the sight of the city suburbs on July 2 when in two separate flotillas they pass through Long Island Sound and along the island's Atlan-

East Siders Begin Drive To Bar LeFrak Project

By JOHN T. McQUISTON

Three hundred East Side residents who do not want Samuel J. LeFrak, the city's biggest private landlord, to construct a 29-story luxury apartment building in their area, began a drive last night to "preserve the quality" of their neighborhood.

"It's the wrong building at the wrong time in the wrong place," said Suzanne LaCroix, the leader of the community effort, at a resident meeting at the Conservative Synagogue at 308 East 55th Street.

The proposal is for a building to be constructed on a mid-block site that extends from East 54th Street to East 55th Street, between First Avenue and Sutton Place South.

The Lefrak Organization, which put together three separate plots to create the site, said that because of the site's odd shape the organizations faced economic hardships. Therefore, it has petitioned the Board of Standards and Appeals for variances to waive local zoning requirements.

A public hearing on the LeFrak petition is scheduled to be held next Tuesday at 10 A.M. at the board's offices at 80 Lafayette Street.

Mrs. LaCroix urged all those at last night's meeting to show up at the board offices to protest the petition.

"LeFrak had full knowledge when he bought the property," she said. "Therefore, the hardship is self-induced and LeFrak should not now be granted so-called hardship variances."

Mrs. Carvel Moore, a member and past chairman of Community Planning Board 6, said that the variances sought by Mr. LeFrak would add to the area's density, would congest traffic and would not provide the setback of 15 feet that is

Driver, 75, Indicted In Auto Deaths of 4 Near Plaza Feb. 22

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

A 75-year-old businessman whose automobile ran out of control and struck and killed four men outside the Plaza Hotel last February was indicted yesterday on charges of criminally negligent homicide.

The indictment against the man, Philip Cohen of 70 East 10th Street, was handed up by a Manhattan grand jury following a three-month investigation by the Manhattan District Attorney's office. During its deliberations, the grand jury heard testimony from 10 witnesses, including Mr. Cohen, and considered charges of murder, manslaughter, criminally negligent homicide or not returning an indictment at all.

The indictment involves the lowest grade of homicide, but the one most frequently returned by grand juries in vehicular homicide cases. If convicted, Mr. Cohen faces up to four years in prison on each of the four counts, but usually such terms run concurrently.

Driver Suffers Injuries

Mr. Cohen suffered a broken right knee and mouth injuries when his 1976 rented Cadillac lurched onto the sidewalk, struck the four pedestrians, injured three others, sheared off utility posts and overturned a horse-drawn Victoria carriage before it came to a stop against a taxi 150 feet away.

Still recuperating from his leg injury, Mr. Cohen was taken to Manhattan Supreme Court in a wheelchair late yesterday for arraignment. A small man with white hair and a white moustache, Mr. Cohen pleaded not guilty to the charges and was paroled in his own custody for a hearing on May 17.

Harvey Burko, the assistant district attorney who presented the case to the grand jury, told Acting Justice Robert Haft in State Supreme Court that Mr. Cohen had cooperated in the inquiry.

Mr. Cohen was returning to the city from a wedding in New Jersey in the early morning hours of Feb. 22. A friend drove the car to his apartment building at 40 Central Park South, a half block west of the Plaza, at which point Mr. Cohen got behind the wheel.

Primary in Indiana Ended Madden's 34-Year Career

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

INDIANAPOLIS, May 5—The Indiana primary yesterday ended the 34-year political career of the oldest member of Congress and portended a grueling contest for a United States Senate seat between the Republican and Democratic primary victors. The primary was the state's first involving a United States Senate seat and state offices in nearly half a century.

Chief among them were the contests involving two Democrats—Senator Vance Hartke and Representative Ray J. Madden. Mr. Madden, who was elected in 1942 from the state's First Congressional District, which took in the heavily industrialized area of Gary, was beaten by an aggressive lawyer, State Senator Adam Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin, a former protégé of the 84-year-old Mr. Madden, nearly defeated the chairman of the House Rules Committee in the 1972 House primary.

Narrow Hartke Victory
Mr. Hartke, who is seeking a fourth six-year term in the Senate, an unprecedented tenure in this state, narrowly defeated his Democratic primary opponent, Representative Philip H. Hayes.

Mr. Hayes was politically unknown in Indiana until he won his Congressional seat in the Evansville area in the 1974 post-Watergate election that bodied ill for a number of Indiana Republicans. Mr. Hartke, who had Democratic organization support as well as a well-financed campaign, was the target of repeated charges by Mr. Hayes that in his years in office the Senator catered to special interests, such as the telephone industry. On several occasions, he had been rebuffed by Mr. Hartke's adopted son.

Political observers here today noted Mr. Hartke's slender margin of victory, about two percentage points, and predicted that he would have a tough fight against the winner of the Republican Senatorial primary, Richard G. Lugar, the former Mayor of Indianapolis.

Mr. Lugar, a 44-year-old former-Rhode scholar, trounced his Republican opponent, former Gov. Edgar D. Whitcomb, talking about 65 percent of the vote. In 1974, Mr. Lugar ran against Senator Birch Bayh, a Democrat, and lost.

Mr. Hartke lost no time in starting to run against Mr. Lugar, reminding supporters at a victory celebration that his opponent had been "President Nixon's favorite Mayor."

Both Mr. Hartke and Mr. Lugar said that they would campaign on issues not personalities, but the betting among politicians was that the race would heat up in the months ahead.

Hartke Assessment
Assessing Mr. Hayes's strong showing against him in the state where fealty to the state party organization is a tradition, Mr. Hartke said: "As I see it, there is no longer a valid organization by the party capable of guaranteeing anyone a victory, with the possible exception of the Daley machine in Chicago, and even that is suspect."

Mr. Hartke was also critical of the local press, contending that coverage had been weighted during the campaign in favor of Mr. Hayes. The race between Mr. Madden and Mr. Benjamin became testy in the last days of campaigning. Mr. Benjamin contended that Mr. Madden's age precluded him from adequately representing his constituents' needs and also interfered with the smooth operation of the House Rules Committee.

At one point, Mr. Madden called Mr. Benjamin an "ungrateful rat." But today he was wishing well to the man who vanquished him and was telling newsmen he planned to go fishing. In other local Indiana races, the Democratic Secretary of State, Larry Conrad, defeated two opponents in the gubernatorial race and will run against the incumbent Republican, Gov. Otis Bowen, in the fall.

The Republicans will be trying hard in the months ahead to win back some of the Congressional seats lost in the aftermath of Watergate. The main targets are the Second Congressional District, which takes in Lafayette; the Sixth, made up of suburbs of Indianapolis; the Eighth, which Mr. Hayes represented before his bid for the Senate; and the 10th, which includes the city of Muncie.

Yesterday's statewide primaries were the first since 1928, when primaries were scrapped in part to stem the political influence of the Ku Klux Klan. Candidates for the Senate and state offices were chosen at state party conventions until the recent decision to restore starting to run against Mr. Lugar, reminding supporters at a victory celebration that his opponent had been "President Nixon's favorite Mayor."

Ford Is Reviewing Strategy in Light of Reagan Gains

said they suspected that the bloc of uncommitted delegates, which numbered 327 as of yesterday, could hold the balance of power when the convention opens at Kansas City in August. The largest uncommitted groups are from New York and Pennsylvania, with the rest scattered.

That could give considerable bargaining power to Vice President

By convention time, commented Robert S. Strauss, the Democratic national chairman. Mr. Rockefeller may be "the fellow in the cabdriver's seat." Emboldened by their success in Indiana, meanwhile, the Reagan forces laid plans for an attempt to ambush President Ford in his home state, Michigan. Senator Paul Laxalt of Nevada, the California conservative campaign manager, said in Washington that he and other strategists were weighing the possibility of a news media blitz and stepped-up campaigning in Michigan.

To date, Mr. Reagan has scheduled only one stop in the state. He has done little organizing. But Michigan permits crossovers, and Governor Wallace drew 509,239 votes in winning the 1972 Democratic Presidential primary there, which suggests that the potential for crossovers this time is large. The Reagan forces moved quickly to exploit that possibility. At a news conference in Lansing, the former Governor's state campaign manager, State Senator John A. Welbourn, said that Mr. Reagan was "talking the same things now that Governor Wallace was talking four years ago."

Jerry Roe, the executive director of the Michigan Republican Party, said there was great local pride in the fact that Mr. Ford was the first President from the state. Mr. Welbourn, he said, is the only Republican of even local prominence who is supporting Mr. Reagan. But he noted that Michigan's proportional representation law gave Mr. Reagan a chance to win some delegates.

"I think he could win 35, 40 percent of the vote," Mr. Roe commented, "and that would give him 35, 40 percent of the delegates. That wouldn't look good for the President."

The prospect caused evident concern at the White House. Ron Nessen, the Presidential press secretary, told reporters, "I'd be kidding you if I didn't say there was a concern that the President could possibly lose Michigan."

Asked what strategy Mr. Ford would use to combat the crossover problem, Rogers C. B. Morton, the President's campaign manager, responded in a troubled voice. "I don't know."

In addition to Michigan, whose primary on May 18 offers perhaps his best chance in the next month to prevent a snowdrift of Reagan support, Mr. Ford must compete in four other crossover states: Idaho, Arkansas and Tennessee on May 25 and Montana on June 1. He seems likely to lose all.

The two states that vote next Tuesday, Nebraska and West Virginia, do not permit crossovers. Before Indiana, Mr. Ford had been considered the leader in West Virginia and had been thought to trail only slightly in Nebraska. But officials in both states said yesterday that Mr. Reagan now had to be considered the favorite, given his new found momentum.

However, Lloyd Hooper, a regional coordinator for Mr. Ford in the upper Middle West, said that canvassing today showed the President holding a slight lead in most areas.

Some of those close to the President were reportedly urging him to try to picture Mr. Reagan as an extremist, much as Lyndon B. Johnson did when he opposed Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona twelve years ago.

But other Presidential advisers cautioned that such tactics might split the party so badly that the Democrats would win easily in November. That was what happened in 1912, when Theodore Roosevelt, despite the nomination despite his primary victories, formed the

Salvaging Asset of Incumbent

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 5—The central asset of President Ford's candidacy, his White House incumbency, appears to have been neutralized and perhaps ravaged by four successive losses to Ronald Reagan in Republican primaries. "He's literally squandered an immense advantage," a distraught Ford campaign official said today.

Mr. Ford's election prospects, as a nonelected President, have always rested heavily on his ability to establish himself as a candidate of "Presidential" stature. But in falling behind Mr. Reagan in the count of committed convention delegates and in allowing the Republican campaign to center on Mr. Reagan's issues, Mr. Ford has, in the troubled view of his strategists, become less a President seeking a Republican mandate than another Republican seeking the Presidency.

He is still the President," an aide said this afternoon. "He still has the trappings. He still has the office. He still has the power to use the office—which he hasn't been doing. He has got to get off the same level as Reagan."

A Dismal Precedent
Mr. Ford has lost five primaries. In the last four, Georgia, Texas, Indiana, Georgia and Alabama, he gained only 9 convention delegates to Mr. Reagan's 210.

The President and his campaign have not, apparently, adequately explained and gotten across the accomplishments of this President," Ron Nessen, the White House spokesman, said in evident understatement.

Mr. Ford said his record was good and he vowed to "do a better job of selling it" but he gave the impression to reporters in the White House Rose Garden that he was not sure how to go about it.

The President has asked Rogers C. B. Morton, the campaign chairman, to re-examine his strategy and tactics—everything from where Mr. Ford should go to what he should say—to seek some means of energizing apathetic Republican moderates to stir themselves to vote for him in the remaining primaries.

Behind the reassessment was a belated recognition that Mr. Ford's last major policy pronouncement was his State of the Union address in January and that rather than using his office to display leadership initiative he had become even more deeply enmeshed in a competition with Mr. Reagan for the soul of the Republican right wing.

Fear on Conservatives
"We're never, never going to get those crazies back with us," one Ford associate said of the conservative zealots. "They're going to march down the street with Reagan singing 'Battle Hymn of the Republic.' We've got to motivate our people to get out and vote."

The President's tactical priorities and some possible remedies were quickly listed by his agents at the President Ford Committee as follows:

The six to 10 speeches Mr. Ford gives on an average campaign day have ranged, uncited, across as many topics and been delivered in a torpid style that even the President's own conversation with Mr. Ford last Saturday night, Don Penny, a New York producer of television commercials, has been coaching the President on speech delivery, trying, as Mr. Penny put it, to get him to come across less like Gary Cooper. Mr. Ford's writers will also try to develop a basic, crisply worded stump speech, which, by repetition, the President will use to press his contention that he represents peace, prosperity and White House integrity.

Ever since he experimented, to apparent good effect, with a question-and-answer format last February in New Hampshire, Mr. Ford has given most of his audiences 30 minutes or more to interrogate him. Lately, these sessions have become interludes for Mr. Reagan's adherents to challenge the President to defend Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, the Panama Canal negotiations and the Pentagon budget, putting Mr. Ford almost constantly on the defensive. There are likely to be fewer questions in the future.

Despite declining this year that he would paign largely on issues cause he was busy being a father, Mr. Ford has spent six days in the past week on delegations.

Whatever the tactical changes that remained the strategic problem for Ford could try to press Reagan's recent success snowballing. The President never seemed to intend deal with his rival. He alternately critic Reagan as "irresponsible" and "diplomatic" and "diplomatic" might consider him as a running mate.

For the first time opening House and political wondering, perhaps however, if Mr. Ford give the Reagan the only method one strategist could suggest for overcoming Mr. surge was to abandon wing and portray Mr. as a dangerous reach

Delaney Likely to Head Rules Panel

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 5—The defeat of Representative Ray J. Madden yesterday in the Indiana Democratic primary has made Representative James J. Delaney, a 75-year-old Queens Democrat, the leading contender to be chairman of the House Rules Committee when the next Congress convenes in January.

Several representatives said today that younger Democrats in the House, who ousted three long time committee chairmen last year and who regard Mr. Delaney as too old and too conservative, may try to challenge him for the chairmanship.

But Mr. Delaney immediately picked up the support of the two next senior Democrats on the Rules Committee, who might have been the strongest challengers for the chairmanship—Representatives Richard Bolling of Missouri and B. F. Sisk of California.

Sweeping Changes
"I think Delaney is going to be the chairman," Mr. Bolling said in an interview. "I think he deserves it. He's always been a leadership man."

"I wouldn't raise a hand to overturn Jim Delaney," Mr. Sisk said.

The defeat of the 84-year-old Mr. Madden by State Senator Adam Benjamin underscored the sweeping changes that will take place in the Congressional leadership next year.

Eight senators, including Mike Mansfield of Montana, the Senate majority leader, and Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate minority leader, have announced their plans to retire.

As of now, 47 representatives, including six House committee chairmen, will not be back next year. Most of these representatives are retiring or seeking other offices. Mr. Madden, chairman of the Rules Committee since 1973, is the first incumbent to be defeated in the primaries this year.

Many representatives also expect that Representative Carl Albert of Oklahoma, the Speaker of the House, will announce his retirement, thus setting off a reshuffling of the House Democratic leadership. Mr. Bolling, for example, is regarded as a likely contender for one of the leadership posts.

If Mr. Delaney is selected next January to be the new chairman of the Rules Committee, he would be the first House committee chairman from New York City since Representative Emanuel Celler of Brooklyn, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, was defeated for renomination in the 1972 Democratic primary.

A Democratic steering committee chairman, which is subject to final approval by a caucus of all House Democrats.

Representative Jonathan B. Bingham, Democrat of the Bronx, who is the only New York member on the steering committee, said today he had talked with most of his fellow New York Democrats and added that there was "no question" that the New York delegation would support Mr. Delaney for the chairmanship.

"It could be significant in terms of legislation, such as aid to New York," Mr. Bingham said of the rules chairmanship.

"It has to help New York," said representative Edward L. Koch, Democrat of Manhattan. The 16-member Rules Committee acts as an arm of the House leadership. The committee's power lies in controlling which bills reach the House floor and in establishing the ground rules under which the bills are previously approved by the other House committees, are debated and amended on the floor.

First Since Celler
In the past, House chairmen were chosen almost automatically on the basis of their seniority in the committees. But with the ousting of the three chairmen last year, seniority no longer is the controlling factor in selecting chairmen.

Some representatives speculated today that labor leaders might not be enthusiastic about having Mr. Delaney as chairman. Labor groups have strongly supported Mr. Madden's campaigns in the past, but this support was not enough yesterday for Mr. Madden in his district, which includes the cities of East Chicago, Gary and Hammond.

Mr. Delaney, who also faces re-election this year, had the endorsement of the Democratic, Republican and Conservative Parties in his last campaign. Mr. Delaney is completing his 15th term in the House and has been a member of the Rules Committee since 1949, patiently awaiting the day he would move up to chairman.

"It would be a great way to wind up," he said today. As for his age, Mr. Delaney noted that some chairmen of the Rules Committee had been in their 90's.

He jokingly said of the committee, "It's a good health resort."

Women Hoping to Sponsor Presidential Debates

By ELEANOR BLAU

The League of Women Voters announced yesterday that it hoped to sponsor a series of four debates in the two major candidates in the November Presidential election.

Expressing hope that the candidates would agree to the debates and that they would receive national television coverage, Ruth C. Clusen, president of the league, said that this would be the first time since the Kennedy-Nixon debates 16 years ago that candidates would be exposed to such public scrutiny.

"Americans have signaled their desire to know the substance of the candidates' positions on critical problems," she said at the league's convention here at the New York Hilton Hotel. "They are tired of having these positions handed to them in neat, candidate-controlled packages. The debates, she added, would counter voter apathy."

Saying that the television networks had been avoiding debates because of legal requirements, she asserted that the envisioned debates would be new events and so could be covered without concern for the need for equal time to all candidates. Equal time provisions were waived by Congress for the 1980 debates.

Major Jobless Areas Show First Decline in 4 Months

WASHINGTON, May 5 (AP)

The number of major metropolitan areas with substantial unemployment rates dropped by one to 130 in April, the Government said today. It was the first improvement in the Labor Department's area unemployment measure in four months.

Three areas — Washington, D.C., Little Rock, Ark. and Steubenville, Ohio-Weirton, W. Va. — were removed from the list, but two others were added: Des Moines, Iowa, and Tulsa, Okla.

Substantial unemployment means an area has a jobless rate above 6 percent with the rate expected to continue at least two more months. Businesses in areas with this classification are eligible for preferential treatment in bidding on certain government contracts.

VALID VOTES MARITIME PRIMARY

ter Still Holds Lead in egates, But Ballot Mixup lay Mar His Victory

By RICHARD D. LYONS

WASHINGTON, May 5—Voting in predominantly black districts of Columbia appeared to have given Jimmy Carter a plurality of its 13 delegates to the Democratic National Convention, but the former Georgia Governor's primary may be more apparent.

Mr. Carter won 10 of the 13 delegates in the Democratic primary here yesterday, but because of the intricacies of an electorate that forced to decipher more than 50 separate pieces of paper.

Mr. Carter also talked by telephone yesterday with Governor Carey and with Patrick J. Cunningham, the party's state chairman. He told them that the Democratic candidate for President would need to carry New York in November and he called for "party unity."

In connection with the delegation chairmanship, Mr. Carey is said to favor former Mayor Robert F. Wagner, although he has not been pushing his choice actively. "From Carey," said one party leader, "the word comes by osmosis."

Some suspicious politicians suggested that, in projecting the Mayor as delegation leader, politicians friendly to Mr. Cunningham might be attempting to prevent a buildup of support for anyone else, so the state chairman could slip into the job himself.

Mr. Cunningham's friends attribute some of the coolness that developed between the chairman and the Governor during that prolonged legal battle to Mr. Wagner's advice to the Governor to keep his distance.

Aside from political infighting, local politicians say there are good reasons why the Mayor of the convention's host city would be a good choice to head the host delegation.

Beame Expected to Head Party's State Delegation

By MAURICE CARROLL

Mayor Beame is likely to be chosen chairman of the New York delegation to the Democratic National Convention, politicians said yesterday.

"If the vote was today, it would be the Mayor," said one party official taking part in the discussions. Things could change he cautioned by the time the delegation—274 delegates and 113 alternates—meets to organize itself on May 14 in the Statler-Hilton Hotel.

The chairmanship would be boost—partly in real power, partly in prestige—for Mr. Beame, and it would be a setback of sorts for Governor Carey.

Mr. Beame is an at-large delegate pledged to Senator Henry M. Jackson. With the Jackson candidacy in eclipse, the Democratic front-runner, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, telephoned the Mayor yesterday, seeking his support.

The conversation lasted about 20 minutes, Mr. Beame's press secretary, Sidney Frigand, told City Hall reporters. It was a friendly talk in which Mr. Carter gave a "sympathetic response" to concerns expressed by Mr. Beame about the needs of the cities, Mr. Frigand said.

The chat ended without Mr. Beame giving his endorsement, but Mr. Frigand said the two men expected to meet next week when Mr. Carter brings his party-harmony appeal to New York City.

Results in Alabama Show Wallace Strength Fading

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES JR.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 5, he said, "I could support him." Mr. Wallace almost certainly will control the Alabama delegation at the New York convention. It will consist of 27 delegates selected yesterday and on May 25, plus eight more to be chosen by party officials.

Since Mr. Wallace already has 12 delegates, he will probably win half a dozen or so in the runoffs and will no doubt control at least four of the delegates chosen by party officials, he stands to over-

Madison Square Garden in command of a clear majority of the 35-member delegation. Delegation control has never before been a serious issue for him. In previous runs for the Presidency, Mr. Wallace was able to take the Alabama primary for granted, so certain was he of his political prowess in his home state.

But this time, because of Jimmy Carter, he has been forced to scramble. He spent $40,000 and the better part of last week pleading with his old constituency to stick with him one more time.

Reagan Aided by Ads Conservative Group Paid For

By JOSEPH LELYVELD

WASHINGTON, May 5—Ronald Reagan's campaign picked up extra impetus in Texas and Indiana in the form of polemical radio commercials and newspaper advertisements that were prepared and paid for by the American Conservative Union, a rightwing organization with 70,000 members.

The thrust of the ads is the argument that "there is a difference" between President Ford and his Republican challenger from California. The conservative group, it is charged, continued compromises with "liberal politics-as-usual" by Mr. Ford, or Mr. Reagan's "new initiatives in freedom."

The organization began its effort in the Florida primary campaign when Mr. Reagan was still refraining from direct attacks on his opponent's record. Since then it has spent $110,000 in seven states in his behalf. In Texas, it spent $33,000, nearly one-fifth as much as the total advertising effort reported by the Reagan campaign.

In Indiana, the group spent $15,000 with emphasis on four Indianapolis radio stations and weekly newspapers published in the city's suburbs.

Each ad stipulates that it was not authorized by Ronald Reagan or his campaign committee. Under the Supreme Court's decision on the Federal campaign law, this disclaimer frees the organization to raise as much money as its supporters will contribute.

M. Stanton Evans, chairman of the American Conservative Union, said that the supporters were often "reluctant to hear" that the Court's decision made it possible for them to spend more for Mr. Reagan than the $1,000 limit that applies to contributions to his campaign or any other candidate's. Nevertheless, Mr. Evans said, the group has received contributions in excess of $1,000 including $5,000 in the process, it has aggressively charged through the door opened by the court while discovering new uses for political money.

Mr. Evans, whose voice is used in the radio commercials, says the advertising seeks to convince conservative voters that Mr. Ford is "operationally" liberal, whatever his subjective opinions. In support of this thesis, it cites the appointment of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's continued tenure in office, the growth in the Federal deficit and the softening of the President's opposition to aid for "free-spending New York City."

union, argued that Mr. Ford had appointed more liberals than conservatives to top posts. It offered six examples, starting with Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Kissinger and including Representative Bella S. Abzug of Manhattan.

Mrs. Abzug is shown in a photograph wearing a characteristically flamboyant hat. The ad describes her as an advocate of "almost every leftist cause imaginable—from homosexual men's Year, a separate body, 'rights to decriminalization' of marijuana." To support its assertion that she is a member,

2 SIDES TO MEET IN BUILDING STRIKE

Bargaining Is Set for Today at the Mayor's Request —Arbitration Possible

By DAMON STETSON

At the urging of Mayor Beame, negotiations for the striking building service employees and apartment-house owners agreed yesterday to meet together today in an effort to resolve their bargaining stalemate.

The Mayor said that he was hopeful that the discussions would lead to an early settlement of the three-day walkout, but he suggested that both sides agree to arbitration if they were unable to reach agreement through bargaining.

Leaders of Local 32B of the Service Employees International Union, representing the strikers and officials of the employer group, the Realty Advisory Board, met for 45 minutes with the Mayor at City Hall yesterday as the strike's impact caused increasing inconvenience for many tenants. One of the major complaints was the growing accumulation of uncollected garbage and trash at some locations.

John J. Sweeney, president of the local, said that the strike was continuing to spread, but at a slower pace, and that the union had concentrated yesterday on "beefing up our picket lines at apartment houses in Manhattan."

Of the 4,000 buildings where the union represents employees, about 2,500 in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens are being picketed, he said, adding that the walkout had not as yet been extended to Staten Island. Another union represents employees in the Bronx.

The union has indicated that it might try to sign separate agreements with individual owners or cooperatives, which he said could withdraw from the Realty Board and negotiate directly with the union if they wished. But Edward Sulzberger, chairman of the negotiating committee for the Realty Board, asserted that any owner or cooperative signing a contract separately would be subject to expulsion from the employer group.

"If anyone does it, I think he'd be out of my mind," Mr. Sulzberger said. "It could destroy the unity of the board members."

Both Positions Firm

Mayor Beame said that he emphasized to the union and management officials the problems that the strike was causing city residents, particularly the older and the handicapped. He said the city, the strikers and the landlords were all suffering as a result of the walkout.

"Nobody gets any benefit out of this strike," he said.

Vincent D. McDonnell, chairman of the State Mediation Board, who said with the Mayor at the City Hall meeting, said that the bargaining session was scheduled for 2:30 P.M. today at the Biltmore Hotel.

One of the difficulties, Mr. McDonnell explained, is the employers' requirement that certain items in the current contract be eliminated. But the union, he said, had indicated that this would never be done.

"This is the case of an immovable force meeting an immovable force," he said.

Despite the firm positions of both sides, he said that he was hopeful that today's meetings would generate some movement toward a settlement. He then cited one of his favorite quotations of Casey Stengel, former manager of the New York Yankees baseball team: "They say it can be done, but it don't always work."

Arbitration Last Resort

Mr. McDonnell said that neither the union nor the Realty Board had said no to Mayor Beame's suggestion for arbitration. But he said that both preferred to resolve the dispute themselves rather than to resort to a third party.

The board announced late yesterday that its members would meet at 11 A.M. today at the Commodore Hotel to hear a report on the strike situation.

The union has been seeking a pay increase of $50 a week, but the employers are attempting to hold the line on wages and also eliminate or reduce some of the benefits included in the current contract.

The Realty Board sent a telegram to Mayor Beame yesterday complaining that Sanitation Department workers were failing to remove refuse from the streets in front of struck apartments, thereby creating a "serious health hazard."

The Health Department said yesterday that there was no overall health danger as yet as a result of the strike. The department said that it had 80 public health sanitarians answering calls from the public about difficulties, which so far have been mainly from elderly people needing prescriptions filled or needing to get to a hospital.

However, a group called Citizens for a Better New York announced that they would gather at Gracie Mansion at 2 P.M. today in a gesture of protest. Each protester, a spokesman said, would carry a bag of garbage, symbolizing dismay over the failure of sanitationmen to collect garbage at struck apartment houses.

A passer-by waves hello at pickets outside 508 East 79th Street. The men are members of Local 32B of the Service Employees International Union.

Issues in Building Strike

Participants

Local 32B of the Service Employees Union, representing 20,000 superintendents, handymen, elevator operators, porters, mechanics and guards in 4,000 apartment buildings in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island. The Realty Advisory Board represents the building owners.

Issues

The union is seeking a wage increase of $50 a week, in a new one-year contract to supplant the three-year agreement that ended April 20. It is also seeking a better cost-of-living provision, a 35-hour week instead of the present 40 hours, and improvements in pensions, welfare coverage, sick leave and vacations.

The building owners are offering no wage increase and are calling for a reduction in present fringe benefits to help them meet increased real-estate taxes, higher fuel and material costs and continued rent control. They want no payment for the first day of illness; only straight time pay for work on holidays; elimination of the present cost-of-living clause; an employer right to compel retirement of workers at 65 years of age; the elimination of Columbus Day, Election Day and Lincoln's birthday as holidays; and contributions by employees of $3 a week to the welfare fund and $1 a week to the pension fund. The funds are now supported entirely by the employers.

Present wages of the building employees range from $180.15 to $201.77 a week for the workers and up to $15,000 a year for superintendents.

NEW YORK FACING HOSPITAL CLASHES

52 Institutions Open Talks —Municipal Strike Called

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

A union representing 40,000 employees and the operators of 52 nonprofit hospitals and nursing homes in the New York metropolitan area began negotiations for a new contract yesterday in a gloomy atmosphere.

In another hospital dispute, Local 420 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Workers voted last night to strike the municipal hospitals May 24 to protest budget cuts, institution closings and layoffs resulting from New York City's fiscal crisis.

The League of Voluntary Hospitals and Homes—citing growing deficits, with frozen rates of reimbursement by Medicaid and Blue Cross and no new city or state funds—presented negotiators for District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital Care Employees with 26 demands for pay and benefit reductions and productivity improvements. The present two-year contracts with each institution expire June 30.

William J. Abelow, executive director of the league, told the 86-member union negotiating committee at the Biltmore Hotel that the hospitals did not want or expect a strike, but that they were making emergency preparations for one.

When Mr. Abelow had concluded his proposal, Leon J. Davis, president of the union, said: "The 26 proposals are hardly conducive to a reasonable settlement. If the hospitals stick with this position it can only lead to a tragic consequence when the contracts expire."

The union, which will present its own demands at the next bargaining session next Thursday, has set as its major goal a 10 percent wage increase or $20 a week, whichever is greater. It is also seeking higher welfare and pension benefits and better security provisions.

Hospital Deficits Reported

In Federal District Court in Manhattan, the Hospital Association of New York State filed a suit yesterday challenging the state's freeze on reimbursement rates for Medicaid. The suit contended that the freeze illegally deprived the hospitals of needed revenues and would force an illegal reduction in services.

This is the first citywide hospital negotiation to be conducted in the health field since the National Labor Relations Act was amended in August 1974 to give to hospital and health-care workers collective-bargaining rights, including the right to strike. Previous negotiations between District 1199 and the hospitals were governed by the New York State law requiring that such disputes be settled by compulsory arbitration without the right to strike.

About 500 employees have been laid off by the voluntary hospitals and homes in the last few months.

Among the demands presented by the league yesterday were the right to subcontract to produce savings; elimination of some increments; reduction of overtime provisions; either employee contributions for pensions and welfare benefits or their reduction; fewer paid holidays; the right of the institutions to require retirement at age 65, and reduced sick leave.

The present negotiations cover 42 voluntary hospitals and homes and 10 municipal hospital affiliates with a total of 30,665 beds. Wage rates range from $181 to $280 for social workers and other skilled employees. The contracts cover maintenance and housekeeping personnel, laboratory workers, nurses' aides and social workers.

Among the hospitals involved are Presbyterian Mount Sinai, St. Luke's and the New York University Medical Center in Manhattan; Montefiore in the Bronx; Malmonides in Brooklyn; and Long Island Jewish in Queens-Nassau.

In the municipal hospital dispute, about 1,200 of the 18,000 Local 420 members packed the grandballroom and another room in the Diplomat Hotel, 108 West 43d Street, to authorize the strike.

Union officers will meet with First Deputy Mayor John P. Zuccotti at 9 A.M. today in City Hall to discuss the situation.

Music: Vigorous Pianist

Diane Walsh Exhibits Her Prize-Winning Style in Young Concert Artists Series

By DONAL HENAHAN

Diane Walsh is a young pianist who has won a string of significant competitions, most recently the 1975 International Mozart Competition in Salzburg, Austria, and the 1975 Munich International Piano Competition in West Germany. The recital she played Tuesday night at Hunter College Playhouse was a brilliant demonstration of her prize-winning style, though it often fell short of persuading this listener that Miss Walsh had more on her mind than astonishing her audience. Her recital was part of the 15th Young Concert Artists Series.

Like many young performers, Miss Walsh seemed intent on playing up to the limits of her technique at all times. Thus, Mozart's Sonata in A (K. 331) sounded superbly fresh and clear, but also somewhat flashily cold. The kind of unrelenting propulsion that gave the Alla Turca finale such a sense of exultation and bravura lent an odd brusqueness to more lyrical pages.

Similarly, Mendelssohn's neglected Fantasy in G minor (Op. 28) was set off with a blindingly and convincing Presto, skimped somewhat in specification. The fantasy's first movement was fixed to technical display motor impulse. Debussy's "L'Isle Joyeuse," which most all color and style, lay perfectly in Walsh's range and whirled through it with Schumann's Fantasy (Op. 17), one of those works that only a pianist like Miss Walsh's level can to subdue, became a thriller: under the main flaws—fingered. Her performance made one suddenly just how Liszt's keyboard style rhetoric owed to this man masterpiece. Miss Walsh probably will discover great deal more in Fantasy later, but it is to imagine that she will play it more stunningly.

Building Strike Provides New Roles for Tenants

corner of 64th Street and Madison Avenue, once known as the Verona, was built at the turn of the century and is described in the American Institute of Architects' guide to the city as Edwardian. There are 28 apartments and no vacancies.

"The small but ornate lobby is dominated by a flowing, marble center staircase, which splits to the left and right at the second-floor level. There is an elevator on each side of the staircase. Each elevator serves 14 tenants.

"There are no halls through any floor," Mr. Tuck said.

Emergency Help

The city has established an Emergency Operating Center at 60 Centre Street to provide assistance to tenants with problems stemming from the strike. The telephone number is 267-9800.

"So there are tenants on the other side of the building I had not met until now. Rather charming, too."

Mr. Tuck began his elevator operator's career on Monday in formal attire. One startled visitor to the building said he bowed to all his passengers and kissed the women.

The residents are running the building's service elevator, the only one that serves all the apartments.

Yesterday, a list was posted on the elevator wall and tenants had written their names alongside the time they preferred to serve as operator. "We had to split up some of the two-hour shifts," one tenant said, "so more people could get a chance. They're like kids with a new toy."

The building's superintendent, Joseph Martin, was still working yesterday. "I belong to the same union," he said, "but my contract runs until June 30. Thus, there are no immediate problems with heat, light or water in the building."

That leaves the elevators, deliveries, mail and the garbage. "It took about 10 minutes to ruck up all the garbage," Mr. Tuck said. "I think some of the people are giving it to their maids to take out with them."

The accumulated garbage, not yet aromatic, was piled behind a high wrought-iron gate at the east side of the building. "If it begins to smell," one tenant said, "the people it will really bother are the fellows picketing outside."

Picketing yesterday were three of the 11 striking employees: David Sizer, an elevator operator in the building for 10 years; Gerard Crawford, service elevator operator and an employee at 32 East 84th for 16 years; and Emiliano Padilla, a maintenance man, who has worked there for just over a year.

Mr. Crawford said that after 16 years he made $186.50 a week—and that's not take-home. Mr. Padilla's pay is $154.

Ogling Adults Upstage Young To Meet Star Of 'Blue Bird'

By KANDY STROUD
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 5 — Elizabeth Taylor, 10 diamonds on each ear and a sun of sapphires and diamonds at her very visible and ample bosom, caused a stampede of men, women, children and Russians at an ice cream social in Washington yesterday afternoon.

"Holy cow! I'm getting claustrophobia," the serene queen of cinema, clinging to a rose and her flowing royal blue Halston halter pajamas, told her escort, Iranian Ambassador Ardeshir Zahedi, as the jostling, bustling, autograph-hungry throng pressed in on her, and two dozen paparazzi elbowed small children out of the way.

"Come," said Mr. Zahedi. "I will take you to a quiet cooler place." The world premiere at the Eisenhower Theater of Maurice Maeterlinck's classic "The Blue Bird," the first American-Soviet co-production, was supposed to provide Liz Taylor with the opportunity to meet the children of Washington at a sedate family affair. But instead, in the Kennedy Center Atrium afterwards, she met with bedlam and ogling adults who abandoned all sense of propriety and poked hands, pens, papers and flowers at her.

"Oh, she has the most exquisite eyes I've ever seen," one woman cooed, swooning back into the mob scene. "Look at that skin," sniffed another woman. "It's worse than mine, and I'm seven years younger."

"Miss Taylor! My Congressman told me to give this flower to you," said Jack Ryan, assistant press secretary to Representative James J. Florio, as he brandished a small wilted posy and tried to penetrate the flying wedge of park police. Secret Service men and Iranian bodyguards flanking Miss Taylor, "I saw you in the subway," shouted Senator John Sparkman, who managed to plunge his way through the fray to pose for a picture with the 44-year-old movie star.

But few children, except for those edged forward by parents such as Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association, Representative G. Rogers or those in Miss Taylor's immediate path were able to see or greet the star of "The Blue Bird." Miss Taylor, who plays the Witch, Light, the Peasant Mother and Maternal Love in the film, did squeeze her way into a corner to hug and kiss Cyrus Eaton's grandson, Mark. She also paused to bestow two roses on 9-year-old Lisa Bulman and 8-year-old Eleni Rossides and to make sure they were not crushed. At one point she attempted to shake hands with Representative Yvonne Burke's children, but they were swept aside in a sea of press and socialites.

After an hour, she slipped away the same way she had entered, out the back door and through the underground garage to the safety of the Iranian Embassy where she was staying, leaving the park police to arm wrestle with those who tried to pursue her.

20th Century-Fox's "The Blue Bird" has been plagued with problems since its filming began almost five years ago. Miss Taylor had amoebic dysentery and was hospitalized in London. There were communications difficulties. The Americans were frustrated with slow services in Russian restaurants. And the Russians had reportedly been unhappy with their small token roles and dubbed-in voices, while the choice parts were allotted to Miss Taylor, Jane Fonda, Ava Gardner and Cicely Tyson.

"All that is carping," said the film's director, George Cukor. And opening day was not flawless either. Besides the Taylor stampede, neither Mrs. Walter J. Stoessel Jr., wife of the American Ambassador to the Soviet Union, nor Mrs. Anatoly F. Dobrynin, wife of the Soviet Ambassador to the United States, under whose names and patronage the invitations were issued, showed up. Both women were in Moscow.

A Little Happy Flag-Waving on 7th Avenue

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Perhaps it's the Bicentennial. Or maybe it's just the quality of the clothes. Whatever the reason, it's been a very long time since Seventh Avenue fashion openings had such a pervasive upbeat spirit.

It's as if everyone got together and decided to boost their own, and designers contributed their bit by making clothes that carried an undercurrent of excitement without churning up any artificial controversy via skirt lengths or unnecessary exposure.

Mary Beame, Nancy Kissinger and Robin Duke sat in the first row at the Blassport showing looking pleased, and Paulette Goddard announced after Albert Capraro's show that "it would knock them out in Paris."

Prefers U.S. Styles

Miss Goddard, who spends part of each year in her home in Porto Ronco, Switzerland, said she did not do much clothes-buying in Europe because she found American styles so much better, which is of course what American designers love to hear.

What they are hearing for next fall is a variety of clothes that should encompass, almost everybody's taste, ranging from strictly tailored to vaguely ethnic. In the last category are practical designs derived from work clothes (lumber jackets) and athletic gear (warm-up suits and baseball jackets) as well as a certain amount of fantasy, such as the dresses the covered-wagon crowd wore when they were heading West.

Everybody's cover-up is a big poncho, often hooded, or a blanket.

Bill Blass tailors his poncho in gray flannel and wraps a gray flannel jumpsuit up in it in his Blassport collection.

He also tosses poncho variants over cuffed calf-length pants—call them culottes—and matching vests. This is the new-length trouser Mr. Blass is enthusiastic about and it's part of his tailored look.

Poncho Variations
For fun and games, he tosses a clear plastic coat or poncho over some men-tailored styles, or puts a kangaroo-like plastic pocket on a jumper. He ties little velvet aprons over jumpsuits to give them more formality and cuts his skirts like kilts. Touches like these take the grinnest out of fashion.

Albert Capraro explains his use of layering, which is no more pervasive than many other peoples', as providing "options in dressing." He means his big ponchos don't have to be wrapped over the dirndl skirts they're shown with—they also work with jumpsuits and knickers.

Mr. Capraro's ethnic gambit has peasant overtones: those striped velvet dirndls have little matching boleros and pretty silk shirts with them. His mchair knitted wraps and his Fortuny-like pleated dresses are impressive for evening.

The Gil Ambez collection for Genie is practically all fantasy, running from pioneer-woman ankle-length dresses over ruffled panalons to blanket coats that look warm enough to keep Eskimos cozy. His pointy-hooded monk's robes over tunic-length tabards have a cathedral quality—somebody called them "cathedral chic."

Unquestionably, Mr. Ambez is one of the more inventive designers at work anywhere. For women who get bored with conventional clothes, he offers a vast new world to explore.

Carnival Atmosphere

After the Taylor tidal wave had subsided, the afternoon was one of the most extraordinary spectacles Washington has witnessed. High above the Potomac, sunlight streamed into the Kennedy Center Atrium, turning it into a shimmering fairyland filled with a thousand blue balloons and bluebirds, the music of strolling strings and a Wurlitzer calliope, baskets of pink tulips, lilies, peonies and leatherleaf and ficus trees.

A European carnival atmosphere prevailed, as colorfully costumed Russian children performed peasant folk dances. Lollypop the Clown cavorted, and green-legged marionettes pranced across a stage.

If Soviet children are taught to abstain from the luxuries of the capitalistic world, there was no sign of it. Pigtailed girls from the Soviet Embassy clustered around five buffet tables, stuffing themselves with foot-long hot dogs and gallons of blueberry ice cream, alongside their American counterparts.

For the adults, 20th Century provided eight tables and bars laden with shish kebabs, chicken legs, potato puffs filled with caviar, breaded shrimp and coconut, smoked salmon, Almaden champagne and Russian vodka, 100-proof.

Some Adverse Comments

Just before the film opened, while group photographs were being taken, Miss Taylor introduced Todd Lookinland, who plays her son in the film, as "my son," and when Todd pulled a tiny gold cross from beneath his shirt and held it up for Miss Taylor to see, she embraced and kissed him tenderly. "She gave it to me in Moscow," Todd explained.

Not all agreed on the assessment of the film. The Mexican Ambassador, Jose Juan de Oiloqui, thought it was very poor. Jessica Catto, wife of the protocol chief, Henry Catto, declared it a "six-Kleenex movie. I cried all the way through it." Page Lee Hufty said, "I really got into it. I'm looking for my bluebird and it's attainable."

Intimate Dinner

Mrs. Robb thought it went over the children's heads ("too allegorical") and 7-year-old Lucinda Robb declared that the Blue Bird of Happiness was not to be found in one's backyard as the film suggests, because "it's in your heart."

Ina Ginsburg, chairman of the Fans of the American Film Institute had Miss Taylor for a very private dinner of roast beef, shrimp and spinach crepes at her Georgetown home after the performance.

Miss Taylor, who had changed into see-through black pajamas and crescent diamond earrings; had more room to breathe at the Ginsburg home. She sat in a white slip-covered armchair signing autographs with Russians at her feet and 11-year-old Todd beside her.

Lynda Bird and Charles Robb went to party with daughters Lucinda and Cathy.

can Ballet Theater. But before the night was out, Miss Taylor had her arms around Senator Brooke's neck and was planting kisses on his cheeks. She was also especially attentive to Oleg Konstantinovich Popov, the Soviet clown, and bestowed kisses all over his face, while he rolled his eyes and chattered ecstatically in Russian. Later, in discussing the film, Miss Taylor said, "It was not that I wanted something historic. I wanted to help build the relations between Russia and the United States. I thought it was vitally important. It was necessary." At 11:30 P.M., Miss Taylor slipped quietly into her black limousine and was home alone, leaving the artists and Communists all dazzled by the visit of queen.

THE OPERATOR GIVEN 10 YEARS

High From the Families:
Patients Condemned

By JOHN L. HESS
Mr. Tripi Jr., a 68-year-old operator of nursing homes, was sentenced yesterday in Buffalo to consecutive prison terms totaling 10 years.

The State Supreme Court jury last week found Mr. Tripi guilty of bringing money from families of patients in his Delaware Nursing Home, in return for assigning them to a nursing home in passing sentence, Justice Leon N. Armer said the court can find no real difference between the defendant's obtaining money from relatives of nursing-home patients through the use of the acts of those aged old people on the one hand and the defendant's more professional operation on the other.

Mr. Tripi said he would appeal the court set ball at 10.

Mr. Tripi was the ninth person to be sentenced and the first to receive a prison term. The special state attorney for nursing homes, appointed 18 months ago, said a total of 38 have been indicted and four of these have been convicted and are awaiting sentence.

Among these is Eugene Hollander who was sentenced in court in Brooklyn on to a $10,000 fine and 60 days in a week in the State Center for up to 18 months for Medicare fraud. In comment on the Federal action, Assemblyman J. Stein, Democrat, said the state commission had called it "a tragedy."

Hollander has abused his position for over 20 years, he said, while cutting back on services. He said the sentence shows that the law is being applied to the poor and old, and

Dave Anderson

Sparky Anderson's 'Main Four Guys'

In the visiting team's clubhouse at Shea Stadium, the Cincinnati Reds were slipping off their diamond and ruby World Series rings as they changed into their red-trimmed gray uniforms. In his office, Sparky Anderson was listening to the question that follows him everywhere. Has winning the World Series changed his team? "No," the manager replied. "People keep asking me that and I wonder if they see things I don't see but I tell them, 'Don't you think maybe you're looking too hard?' On this ballclub the main four guys are going to control the attitude of the ball players." The main four guys are Pete Rose, Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan and Tony Perez. "They are my leaders," Sparky Anderson said. "I depend on them. I listen to them." Some major league managers are dictators who don't listen. George (Sparky) Anderson is a dictator, as a manager often must be, but he is also a dictator with a weakness for democracy. "He's lucky," Pete Rose was saying now. "He's got a black guy, a Spanish guy and two white guys that the other players look up to."

'The Bad-Looking Heads'
The other players look up to them because all four might be in the Hall of Fame someday. Now that's a nucleus. That's one reason why, when the season began, Sparky Anderson had the highest winning percentage, .603, of any manager in National League history. Another reason is that Sparky Anderson gives those "main four guys" as much respect as he demands from them.

"Every year in spring training," Tony Perez was saying in his Cuban accent, "he always gets us together with him to talk. Just us four guys. He do it the last four years, since we got Joe Morgan, because he wants us to know that if we got complaints to say them right there. He knows the other guys' eyes are on us. If we go along, the other guys will go along."

Sparky Anderson doesn't like long hair. And at his locker, Johnny Bench smiled as he glanced around the clubhouse.

"It looks like six or seven guys got the word to get a haircut," the catcher said. "I can tell from the bad-looking heads. Sometimes if Pete and I get a haircut, the other guys get the idea. But this time I think they were told. Sparky's got a dress code. When the four of us met with him in spring training this year we got him to change his rule on spring ties on team flights. We convinced him that ties didn't prove anything. The first thing most guys did was loosen them anyway. And a few guys still wear them because they like them. Hey, what's going on over there?"

In front of a mirror, Pedro Borbon, the relief pitcher from the Dominican Republic, was shaving the top of his head. "He got a haircut but it was a bad haircut," Joe Morgan was saying. "I guess he figures now he won't have to worry about it for a while. But the way Sparky runs this club is a hell of a thing because any help he can receive is appreciated. Other managers wouldn't do that. Other managers make you toe the line. We don't get away with anything but you can talk to Sparky about anything. He doesn't always agree with you but at least he gives you his time. And the four of us are different. Pete's rah-rah, Tony is quiet, John and I are in between. There's somebody for everybody. George Foster might come to me, but Darrell Chaney was the flier type, he would go to Pete instead.

"But if a guy is just complaining that he should be playing when he really shouldn't, we let him know. He'll be told he's not better than the guy in front of him. Sparky shouldn't have to hear that. The mistake a lot of managers make is 'I know all, I know best.' That isn't necessarily so. I think a manager's job is to keep 25 guys pointed toward one goal. No manager can expect to keep 25 guys completely happy but he can keep them pointed toward one goal. Some managers I've had, they'd tell a ballplayer to jump off a bridge, so to speak. And if the ballplayer complained, the manager would say, 'Don't ask me why, jump off the bridge.' But one thing we have on the Reds more than anything else, we realize you shouldn't get too high when you win or too low when you lose. And if one of us has a bad day, how we react sets the tone for everybody else on the ballclub.

'Everything Is the Team Winning'
"Everything that Sparky talks about is the team," Joe Morgan continued. "I can go 4 for 4 but if the team plays bad, I'm still part of that bad. Everything is the team winning, not finishing second or third. Sparky thinks they shouldn't give bonus money for finishing second or third. That's what he thinks of winning."

"But winning the World Series last year, that was last year. We knew that on April 8, we were no longer the World Series champions, I knew that on April 8, I was no longer the most valuable player. That we had to do it all over again this year. That last year wouldn't mean anything once the season started this year." This year the Reds' bitter rivals, the Los Angeles Dodgers, have now won 11 consecutive games and ascended to first place in the National League's Western Division, which the Reds dominated by a 20-game margin last season. But the Reds aren't concerned. Not yet anyway. And not by the challenge of Bill Buckner, the Dodgers' outspoken outfielder, Buckner mentioned recently that the Dodgers will "catch the Reds" this season because of the Reds' "second division" pitching staff.

"The Dodgers might catch us in April or May," Sparky Anderson was saying now, "but that's all." Sparky Anderson hadn't bothered consulting with his main four guys. He knew they would agree.

Umpires' Bad Call On Coast

By LEONARD KOPPELT Special to The New York Times ANAHEIM, Calif., May 5—A wise man once observed: "No matter how much you steal, you can't really cash in unless, sooner or later, you reach a fence." He was talking about baseball, of course, and the New York Yankees, who have been devoting themselves to stealing bases as never before, won a game last night by finally reaching, and clearing, a fence. Roy White and Chris Chambliss hit sixth-inning homers off Frank Tanana and these were enough for a 2-1 victory over the California Angels. Manager Billy Martin gives the signal for steals, he lets Yogi Berra, his right-hand man, call the homers. "I hold up a sign that reads, 'Now,'" explained Berra.

"That was an important victory for us," Martin said, "because we lost that tough 2-1 game in extra innings in Kansas City, and if you lose a couple of tough ones in a row, your team starts tensing up when you get to the ninth inning."

But in the first inning the umpires got tense, so the game wound up played under protest by the Angels. If the protest is upheld, neither the victory nor the homers will count, and it will be Martin who gets tense. What happened was originally the fault of Art Frantz, umpiring at third. The Angels had Dave Collins at third and Bobby Bonds on second with one out when Bill Melton hit what the players call a titanic—a sinking liner—to left. White raced in and, he says, caught the ball six inches off the ground. Collins, apparently thinking the ball had been caught, tagged up and scored after the catch.

Bonds, also believing White had made the catch, retreated toward second as White threw there, Melton, figuring he was out, turned left at first base and started back to the Angel dugout, cutting across the infield.

What did Frantz have to do with all this? Nothing, or at least not enough, and that was the trouble. Running toward left field, looking straight at White, Frantz made no discernible call. He didn't signal "out" and he didn't signal "safe," meaning that the ball had hit the ground, although he did make a little flapping gesture with his elbows, which could have been interpreted as meaning safe by anyone who happened to notice it.

Then, after White had thrown the ball to the infield, Frantz did signal safe, ruling that White had trapped the ball. At that point, Melton from somewhere on the infield grass tried to return to first, and the Yankees threw the ball back to the pitcher. Continued on Page 53, Column 5

Reds' Two-Run Burst Tops Mets in 11th, 2-0

By MURRAY CHASS Having caught on to how the Mets treat opposing pitchers with 3-0 records, the Cincinnati Reds tried to confuse Joe Frazier's torrid team last night by starting Gary Nolan. The Reds won, 2-0, on run-scoring singles in the 11th inning by George Foster and Ken Griffey off Tom Hall, a relief pitcher. Joe Morgan started the rally by walking and swiping second for his 10th steal in 11 attempts this season. The loss was only the Mets' second in their last 11 games. Nolan entered the game with only two victories and one defeat. Twenty-four hours earlier, the Mets defeated Fred Norman, who had won his first three decisions, just as they knocked off Dick Ruthven and Phil

Niekro last week after those two Atlanta pitchers had compiled 3-0 marks. There was, however, a 3-0 hurler in this game—Jon Matlack of the Mets. The way Matlack started the game the Reds must have thought he was 20-0. In each of the first three innings, the left-hander struck out the second and third batters. That meant he struck out Joe Morgan and Johnny Bench in the first inning, which further meant that Bench had struck out four times in his first six times at bat in the series. Matlack didn't strike out anyone in the fourth inning, but he retired two more Reds, giving him 11 in a row, before Bench grounded a single between short and third. Tony Perez, who hasn't hit a home run this season, made the last out in the inning on a fly to center field. The Reds actually threatened to score in the fifth when George Foster led off with a bloop single to left and Bob Bailey followed with a single to center. Foster moved to third on Dave Concepcion's fly to center, but Matlack fired a third strike past Cesar Geronimo and Nolan bounced into a force at second. If Matlack chose the strike-out as his weapon in the duel with Nolan, the Cincinnati pitcher selected the double play as his. Three times in the first five innings Nolan induced Met batters to ground into double plays. Del Unser led off the first inning with a single, but Felix Millan grounded to Concepcion, who stepped on second. Continued on Page 53, Column 8

Islanders Teetering, as Usual

By ROBIN HERMAN Jude Drouin's two goals and one assist Tuesday night helped the New York Islanders skirt elimination from their semifinal series with Montreal. But the French Canadian center's mood immediately after the 5-2 victory was not in keeping with the jubilation of his teammates. Drouin appeared to be on the verge of tears, or perhaps an outburst of anger. His voice quivered and his body trembled. "I'm just nervous," he said apologetically. "I've got the shakes. I get them in the playoffs. I'm so keyed up I can't sleep in the afternoons. It's bad." On the contrary, an overload of nervousness has always been good for the Islanders. Tuesday night, true to its reputation, the four-year-old team defied a three-game deficit and the threat of elimination, taking an early 2-0 lead which it increased to 4-0 in the second period. Coach Scotty Bowman of the Canadiens commented: "We were about 20 percent off from our usual game. We were turning it over a lot." Bowman also thought his team allowed Drouin too much rein. Drouin had five shots at Ken Dryden, the 6-foot-4-inch goalie with the placid demeanor and law school education. So far in the semifinal series, Drouin has had four goals and two assists. "At times," said Dryden, "you're not sure who it is and then you hear 'Islander goal' by No. 17, Jude Drouin." Drouin led the Islanders in scoring in the 1975 playoffs, but after a strong performance in the first two rounds he tapered off in the semifinal against the Philadelphia Flyers. "There's nothing worse," said Drouin, "than coming out of a game and you're all beat up and you know you have to do it all." Continued on Page 54, Column 6

Baseball Roundup

Home runs beat the previous mark established in the same park on Aug. 20, 1974. The nine home runs in the game were only two short of the major league two-team record for home runs in a game.

The home runs were substantially aided by the wind. At times, the 31-mile-an-hour wind blowing out from home plate when the game began reached gusts of 50 m.p.h.

and it also made play hazardous in the outfield.

"It was the first time I've ever played in that kind of wind," said Henry Cruz, the Dodger right fielder who hit a pair of homers. "You had to wait and see where the wind was going to carry the ball and then start moving when you had an idea where the ball was going."

Cruz had three runs batted in. The other Dodger home runs were hit by Ed Goodson, in a pinch-hit role, Bill Buckner, Ron Cey, Bill Russell and Steve Yeager. The Cubs' batting star was Rick Monday, who drove in six runs with a pair of three-run homers. John Summers knocked in four runs with three hits.

"It may be as many line drive hits as I've seen in a game in a long time and maybe six or seven of those home runs would have been out without the wind," said Walter Alston, the Dodger manager. "I didn't feel secure until Mike Mansfield got that last man out."

AT BALTIMORE—After giving up a leadoff single to Pat Kelley in the first, Jim Palmer stopped the White Sox until Ralph Garr singled with two out in the ninth.

AT PHILADELPHIA—A grand-slam home run by Bob by Tolan and a two-run drive by Ollie Brown, accounted for all the Philadelphia runs in a sixth-inning uprising.

"The man's out at first base and the run scored, anyhow, so the situation is the same. Forget it." But Dick Williams, the Angel manager, was out arguing, too, and the umpires decided that Melton was safe at first.

"If they stuck to that, they would have to throw me out of the game," said Martin. "and, anyhow, Williams was rude getting into his argument before I finished mine. The visiting manager should have first licks in any argument. Williams could wait until I was through."

Seton Hall Nine Vexing to Redmen

By GORDON S. WHITE JR.

One St. John's baseball fan said recently that Tom Heinerman, a left-handed pitcher for Seton Hall, "looks more like an accountant than a pitcher. But we can't get to him."

Heinerman, with four straight victories over St. John's during the past two seasons, exemplifies the hold Seton Hall has maintained over the Redmen in the last 12 years. The Pirates have beaten St. John's in 17 of 22 games since 1964. Seton Hall put St. John's out of the National Collegiate District II playoffs in 1974 and 1975. Heinerman beat the Redmen, 5-1, in the playoffs last year.

Early this season, St. John's felt happy with a 1-0 lead over Seton Hall, two in the ninth inning, nobody on base and two strikes on the Pirates' batter. St. John's lost the game, 2-1, in the 12th as the Redmen's frustration continued. Heinerman pitched that victory for Seton Hall, too.

Heinerman will probably start against St. John's when these two leading teams in the Metropolitan area meet again next Wednesday. The Redmen and Pirates are also expected to meet later this month in the playoffs leading to the National Collegiate championship.

To counter the knuckleball pitching of the "accountant," St. John's has some of the biggest hitters in college baseball—Tom Raponi, a 6-foot-6-inch left-hander; Rich Hille, a 6-4 right-hander; and Mike O'Connor, a 6-6 left-hander.

The Redmen, with the best won-lost record in the area at 21-2 and with a 19-game winning streak, are quite big hitters, too. Don Seale, batting over 400, is a 6-2 third baseman. Don Troyan, a freshman first baseman, stands 6-7.

But Seton Hall has cut St. John's down to size so often with hunting, stealing, good defensive play and pitching that the Pirates can expect victory on their field next week almost through force of habit.

Most Seton Hall-St. John's games are close, however. The Pirates beat St. John's twice in the 1969 Met Conference playoffs and twice in the Met playoffs again in 1970. The scores were 1-0, 2-1, 4-3 and 3-2.

A smaller St. John's athlete was among those honored last night at the Metropolitan Basketball Writers Association dinner at Mamma Leone's restaurant. He is Frank Alagia, the Redmen's 5-9 guard, who was voted to the all-Met team by the writers group this season. Last week, Alagia received the Naismith Award at the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, Mass., as the outstanding senior in college basketball standing under 6 feet tall.

Phil Sellers of Rutgers received the Frank C. Haggerty Memorial Trophy as the outstanding Metropolitan area player. It was the second straight year that Sellers won the award.

Unfortunately, Gary Winton of Army was not among the players named to the all-Met team. Winton did not receive enough votes to make the team even though he was the leading Division I scorer in the Met area at 22 points a game. Eastern leader in field-goal percentage at .621 and fourth in the Met area in rebounds at 10.7 a game. He had the credentials but no consistency.

Rutgers came from way back to beat Army, 13-12, in a baseball game Tuesday for Matt Bolger's 200th victory as coach of the Scarlet Knights. The Cadets led Rutgers, 10-2, after five innings and lost the game on an unearned run in the last of the ninth at New Brunswick, N.J.

Gilliam, Free Agent, Joins the Falcons

ATLANTA, May 5 (UPI)—John Gilliam, an outstanding receiver in the National Football League for nearly a decade, signed as a free agent with the Atlanta Falcons today.

The 30-year-old player, who caught 165 passes during the last four seasons with the Minnesota Vikings, has been a resident of Atlanta for six years. He said he wanted to finish his career with the Falcons, who signed him to a series of one-year contracts. Gilliam came into the league with the New Orleans Saints in 1967.

Defensesman Honored
CLEVELAND, May 5 (UPI)—Paul Shmyr, captain of the World Hockey Association's Cleveland Crusaders, was named defensesman of the year today in a vote of writers and broadcasters around the league.

Smaller St. John's athlete was among those honored last night at the Metropolitan Basketball Writers Association dinner at Mamma Leone's restaurant. He is Frank Alagia, the Redmen's 5-9 guard, who was voted to the all-Met team by the writers group this season. Last week,

The Nets, who successfully slowed Denver's fast-paced game in the series opener, could not control the tempo last night.

"We missed a lot of shots, and when you do that the game gets faster," Loughery observed. "When you shoot 35 percent the way we did in the first half, there's no way you can control anything."

Rich Jones, the Nets' power forward, was hampered in his shooting by a protective cast over his sprained left wrist. The cast fitted for him in the first half proved awkward, but a smaller model installed at halftime improved his grip. He finished the game with 17 points.

Erving's 25 points in the fourth quarter was a playoff record for professional basketball. The previous A.B.A. record for a quarter was 19, set by Erving in 1972, when he was with Virginia. In the National Basketball Association, the record is 21, by Joe Fulks of Philadelphia in 1947. Fulks, the first player in modern professional basketball to score more than 1,000 points in a season, was shot and killed in an argument over a pistol in a bar in Edenville, Ky., six weeks ago.

Pelé scored last night, but the Cosmos need someone who can get dividends from all of Pelé's creations. The Cosmos hope that problem will be solved when Giorgio Chinaglia puts on his No. 9 uniform and gets on the field.

"Not only can I finish Pelé's efforts, I can create my own chances," Chinaglia said last night after the game. "I can hardly wait to get into action, man." He said he will definitely play for the Cosmos in the game against George Best and the Los Angeles Aztecs in New York on May 17.

over again. Montreal depends more on its skating." Against the Canadiens' skating game and relatively close checking, Drouin has excelled, sweeping in through openings in the defense and harassing Dryden. "It seems," said Lorne Henning, "we can't play unless there's adversity."

More adversity is scheduled for tonight when the teams meet in game 5 of the series. Montreal has the added incentive of having a chance to clinch a finalist's berth in front of Montreal Forum fans.

The Philadelphia Flyers, who hold a 3-1 advantage over the Boston Bruins, can also clinch a berth tonight before a home crowd.

Suddenly injury-ridden, the Bruins must play the defending Stanley Cup champions without Bobby Schanz and Wayne Cashman. Each may require surgery on his left knee after being hurt in Tuesday night's game, which Boston lost, 4-2. Jean Ratelle, who has been the Bruins' leading scorer in the playoffs, was undergoing treatment for back spasms. His status for tonight is uncertain.

Henning's Observations
Although the Islanders seemed masterful in victory Tuesday night, there are two sides to every story. Henning had the first side: "We were forechecking better," said the Islander's determined penalty-killer, "and we didn't give them a chance to set up."

Tuesday night's other two-goal scorer was Guy Lafleur.

City Retail Sales Up Only 3.3%

By ISADORE BARMASH

April sales of New York City's largest department stores, which had been expected to reflect the benefits of a later Easter this year, registered a disappointing 3.3 percent advance from the year earlier level. This was less than the inflation rate in general merchandise.

In the city, the combined March-April sales in these stores were up only 2.7 percent over the same 1975 period, according to a monthly check of the stores. Last year Easter Sunday fell on March 30 and this year it came on April 18, providing a later season in 1976. Merchants had hoped that this would help April to show a substantial gain over the 2 percent rise in March from the same 1975 month.

The city's retail pace continues to run well behind that of the rest of the country as it has for the last two years. The large national chains—such as Sears, Roebuck & Company, today their April sales, the J. C. Penney Company, the E. W. Woolworth Company,

The S. S. Kresge Company and the New York City stores did not only proved less than the rest of the country as it has for the last two years. A. & P. Registered Profit In Fourth Fiscal Quarter

The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, the giant supermarket chain, had a small profit on operations in its fourth fiscal quarter ended Feb. 28. A year earlier, the company, which is revamping its business under new management, suffered the biggest deficit in its history.

Price and Profit
A. & P., which was displaced as the No. 1 supermarket chain by Safeway Stores Inc. a couple of years ago, increased its sales by 9.3 percent in the 14-week period to $1.36 billion from $1.7 billion in the 13 weeks a year ago, despite some 1,400 fewer stores in the latest period.

Price and Profit
replaced the "WGO" approach in its marketing campaign, along with numerous sweeping changes under the new management such as 3,500 store closings, seems to be slowing results.

H. K. Porter Seeks Shares of Fansteel

By HERBERT KOSHEZ.
The H. K. Porter Company announced yesterday that it was offering to purchase any and all of the 1,563,934 outstanding common shares of Fansteel of Chicago, a manufacturer of specialty metals, electrical contacts and carbide cutting tools, at $17 a share. If all shares are tendered, Porter's expenditure would total about $26.6 million.

Small Stock Plans Called Unprofitable By Chicago Banker

By ROBERT J. COLE
Special to The New York Times
WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, Va., May 5—A Chicago banker forecast today that many banks now offering special securities services for the small investor would discontinue them as unprofitable.

Ahead of Schedule
Sales for the 53 weeks of 1975 fell 4.9 percent to $6.538 billion from $6.875 billion in the 52 weeks of the former fiscal year. Sales of stores closed in 1974 and 1975 or which remain to be closed under the facilities-closing program were excluded from 1975 results, the company explained.

Mr. Scott said the company's program for closing marginal stores was "a very important part of our strategy."

British Bankers, Upset by Scandal, Foresee Change

LONDON, May 5—A man phoned C. Hoare & Company, a tiny Fleet Street bank renowned for its personal service, and asked how he might go about opening an account. "Do you know any of our existing customers?" a manager wondered. Alas, the caller did not. "Well, you see," the banker said, "all our customers are introduced by existing customers. We don't like to have a lot of customers."

AILING GEICO GETS NEW TOP OFFICER

Board Chooses a Travelers Insurance Executive for Turnaround Campaign

By CLARE M. RECKERT
Directors of the Government Employees Insurance Company, meeting in Washington yesterday, elected John J. Byrne as chairman, president and chief executive officer. The new head of the financially ailing insurance concern assumes his duties today.

Mr. Byrne, 43 years old, comes from the Travelers Insurance Company. He succeeds Norman L. Gidden, chairman, who assumes the office of president and acting chief executive officer on April 1 when directors did not re-elect Ralph C. Peck to those posts, which he had held since March 1974. Mr. Peck resigned as a director and became a special consultant to the chairman.

Mr. Gidden continues as chairman and chief executive officer of the Criterion Insurance Company, an affiliate.

GEICO is the second largest automobile insurer in New State (behind the Allstate Insurance Company) and is the nation's seventh largest fire and casualty insurance company. GEICO had a loss of $124.2 million last year in contrast to a $26.1 million profit in 1974. In this year's first quarter its operating loss was $20.1 million, including capital losses, the net loss came to $26.4 million. In the 1975 first quarter the operating loss was $1.4 million, and the net loss was $1.9 million.

GEICO has been granted a 47 percent increase in automobile insurance rates in New York State. The new rates, which became effective Monday, were announced April 23 by the state's Department of Insurance.

Yesterday's election of a new GEICO chief came as no surprise since an angry group of shareholders were told at the March 31 annual meeting that efforts would be made to improve the company's financial status and that a new echelon would be installed.

Following the tactics of the CNA Financial Corporation, which had suffered severe insurance losses and went to Allstate to find a new chief, GEICO reached out to Travelers for its new leader.

Mr. Byrne has been with Travelers for nine years, the last three as executive vice president. He was responsible for two of Travelers' four major profit centers: casualty property, personal lines, individual life and health and financial services. He also had general responsibility in data processing and marketing. He was chairman of the Massachusetts Company and chairman or director of several subsidiaries of Travelers.

He serves on an associate board of the Connecticut Bank and Trust Company. Mr. Byrne, a graduate of Rutgers University, received a graduate degree in mathematics from the University of Michigan.

Of his new post, Mr. Byrne said: "I am accepting this challenge after thoroughly studying Geico's financial condition, and I am confident that the company's financial problems can be solved. We will devote our full time and energies to the recovery of our company and its return to a position of preeminence among the property casualty companies."

GEICO's newly increased rates in New York State follow two increases last year totaling 21.4 percent.

Italy Acts to Curb Trade To Bolster Sinking Lira

Only Grain Imports Free From Severest Fiscal Restraints Since War

ROME, May 5 (AP)—Italy imposed strong curbs on foreign-exchange dealings tonight, including stiff import-deposit requirements, in an effort to bolster the plunging lira.

The caretaker Government of Christian Democrat Prime Minister Aldo Moro ordered importers and others dealing in foreign exchange to deposit an amount equal to 50 percent of any transaction in the Bank of Italy for 90 days.

Only grain imports were exempted from the most severe fiscal restrictions since World War II, intended to discourage all imports except vital grain, in a last-ditch effort to stave off the lira's slide to new lows.

The currency closed at 913 to the dollar today, compared to 860 less than four months ago.

Similar but less stringent measures were put into effect two years ago, applying mainly to luxury items. Earlier this year Italy's foreign exchange markets were temporarily closed because of the decline in the lira.

The new measures, which go into effect tomorrow morning, came as Italy entered a six-week campaign for the new Parliament that seems likely to see the Communist Party making sharp gains, perhaps enough to give a share in the Government for the first time since 1948.

Economic experts predicted the measures would further fuel Italy's inflation rate, now close to 30 percent annually, by forcing the government to raise interest rates.

L.L. CONCERN SUED BY S.E.C. ON STOCK

Commission Alleges Fraud by Parklane Hosiery in Share Repurchase

WASHINGTON, May 5—The Securities and Exchange Commission filed today its first suit against a company seeking to buy back its outstanding shares in order to return to private ownership.

It charged the Parklane Hosiery Company of New Hyde Park, L.I., and its chairman with numerous violations of the securities laws, including fraudulently making untrue statements and omitting other information in carrying out a 1974 plan to buy up its shares at $2 a piece.

One of the principal allegations was that the chairman, Herbert N. Somekh, who held 71.6 percent of Parklane's stock, failed to disclose the actual reason for the company's conversion—the need for Somekh to raise $1.3 million that he had borrowed from three banks.

Suit Filed in New York
"There was no valid corporate purpose for such conversion," the commission charged.

The S.E.C.'s complaint was filed in Federal District Court in New York. A copy was distributed here.

S.E.C. officials have debated the question of going private for some time but have come to no clear position. The Division of Enforcement, however, is known to look askance at the practice on the ground that management controls the timing of such transactions and that the public stockholder is often asked to finance the process by which he is forced out of his investment.

Companies most frequently seek to go private when their stock is selling at depressed levels, such as was the case during much of the early 1970's. Parklane had gone public in late 1968 when it marketed 300,000 shares at $3.

Parklane is a retailer of women's hosiery and accessories, which it markets in about 400 Parklane stores throughout the country.

Besides failing to disclose Mr. Somekh's debts, the Parklane proxy material was said to have misrepresented the status of negotiations with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York over a cancellation of Parklane's lease in property being acquired for a new Federal Reserve building in lower Manhattan.

The commission asked the court to appoint a special counsel with broad powers to determine a fair value for the stock and to recommend to the court and the commission what relief should be provided for shareholders who accepted Parklane's offer.

I. M. F. GOLD SALE IS PANNED JUNE 2

First of Auctions to Dispose of 780,000 Ounces—Poor Nations Will Benefit

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, May 5—The International Monetary Fund will sell 780,000 ounces of gold at its first auction of gold, scheduled for June 2, it was reliably reported today.

A formal announcement of the I.M.F.'s gold auction plan is expected tomorrow. The executive directors gave final approval to the plan today.

World finance ministers had already agreed early this year in Jamaica that the fund would sell 25 million ounces of its gold over a period of four years, with the profits to go to the world's poorest countries.

The profit will arise from the difference between the price received at the auction—presumably close to the world price, now about $127 an ounce—and the "official" price on the I.M.F. books of $42.22 an ounce.

Plan Was Long Known
The gold markets have known for months about the I.M.F.'s intention of selling the 25 million ounces over four years and have presumably taken this into account in anticipating the total supply and future prices.

"Tomorrow's announcement is expected to include the details of the new "trust fund" into which the profits from the gold sale will be placed for the benefit of the poor countries.

The technique of the first sale, according to I.M.F. sources, will be the "Dutch auction," often used by the United States Treasury in selling its securities.

After bids are received, a final "acceptable" price will be established. All bids at or above the established level will be accepted at that price and all bids below that price will be rejected.

Central banks will not be allowed to bid, under the I.M.F. rules.

The Drop Is Laid to Concern Over Course of Interest and Inflation Rate

By VARTAN G. VARTAN
Investor concern over the course of interest rates and the inflation rate weighed upon the stock market yesterday to drive prices steadily lower.

The Dow Jones industrial average, falling to resume a rally that blossomed last Tuesday, sank 7.24 points to 988.46.

The worry about interest rates continued to center on future actions of the Federal Reserve Board in carrying out monetary policy. Concern over the inflation rate centered on the Government report due today on the Wholesale Price Index for April—a report widely believed to show a substantial advance in view of increased economic activity.

In the light of these uncertainties, trading activity on the New York Stock Exchange drifted downward to 14.97 million shares—third slowest session of the year—from Tuesday's 17.24 million shares.

Nationwide trading of all Big Board-listed issues declined to 14.97 million shares.

No Damages in Accountants' Mistake

By ROBERT METZ

Whenever a corporation goes bankrupt, the shareholders look for someone to hold responsible. Until a month ago, the accountants seemed likely candidates.

But on March 30, the United States Supreme Court, in Hochfelder v. Ernst & Ernst, ruled by a vote of 6 to 2, with one abstention, that a mistake or negligence by accountants would not ordinarily lead to damages.

The case involved customers of the First Securities Company of Chicago, a member of the Midwest Stock Exchange and the auditing duties of Ernst & Ernst, the company's accountants.

Leon B. Nay was president of First Securities and owner of 92 percent of its stock. According to the court, Mr. Nay had induced the plaintiffs, Olga Hochfelder and other customers, to invest funds in "escrow" accounts that he represented would yield a high rate of return. In fact, there were no escrow accounts—Mr. Nay converted the funds to his own use immediately upon receipt, the Supreme Court said.

The accounts were not the customary company accounts. According to documents in the case, the customers drew their personal checks payable to Mr. Nay or a designated bank and the "escrow" accounts were not reflected on the books of First Securities. None was shown on its periodic accounting to its customers, with their other investments. Neither, it was said, were the accounts included in First Securities' filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission or the Midwest Stock Exchange.

The court said that Mr. Nay's fraud came to light in 1963—after a quarter-century—when he committed suicide, leaving a note that described First Securities as bankrupt and the "escrow" accounts as spurious.

The customers charged Ernst & Ernst with failure to conduct proper audits and charged that they had failed to set up appropriate auditing procedures.

The point upon which the customer relied for recovery was a rule of Mr. Nay that only he could open mail addressed to him at First Securities or addressed to his attention at First Securities—even if the mail arrived during his absence. The customers contended that if Ernst & Ernst had conducted a proper audit, the accounting firm could have discovered the rule and the fraud that it concealed.

The hazards of a business conducted on these terms are "extreme," Mr. Cardozo added.

A lawyer who follows such cases commented that in his opinion it would be extremely difficult under this latest case to establish liability for professionals, such as members of a Big Eight accounting firm.

Members of such firms, he noted, do not own stock in their client companies, and he added that the firms are big enough so that they can afford to drop a troublesome client and stay in business.

"Their prestige is too important to risk over any one client, however big," he said. "The partners in the firms live pretty well—why should they take a risk for a client that the firm doesn't really need. Without motive, there can be no fraud."

The reaction in the Hochfelder case—which is believed to have significance for all professionals involved in securities—has been quiet satisfaction.

The case appears to mean that those who act in good faith will not be held responsible for mistakes, however serious the consequences.

In business circles, the decision is regarded as sensible and practical. Some who have read the ruling regard remarks of the late Associate Justice Benjamin Cardozo, quoted in the decision, as particularly gratifying.

Justice Cardozo described a claim for damages against an auditor in 1931 as "a liability in an indeterminate amount, for an indeterminate time, to an indeterminate class."

The case was dismissed when it was heard by the District Court, but the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed the ruling, and the case finally went to the Supreme Court.

The Hochfelder case has received some attention—but nothing like the publicity and furor that resulted from the Texas Gulf Sulphur case of 1968, in which that company was held to have violated the antifraud provisions of the securities laws—Section 10-b—because of a mistake a news release that failed to disclose important ore discoveries.

Following the disposition of the case, there was wide discussion of its significance, particularly with regard to potential liability in matters of disclosure. The case indicated strongly that anyone who misled the public even through a mistake could be held in violation of the securities laws.

The reaction in the Hochfelder case—which is believed to have significance for all professionals involved in securities—has been quiet satisfaction.

Stocks Up in Trading on Amex But Declines Exceed Advances

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

The American Stock Exchange and the over-the-counter market finished yesterday with minor price changes in continued slow trading.

The Amex market-value index rose 0.08 to 102.06 although declines outpaced advances by 336 to 223. The price of an average share rose 2-cents.

Volume dipped to 1.80 million shares from 1.95 million on Tuesday.

Trading in Amex issues, including transactions on regional exchanges and the counter market, fell to 1.91 million shares from 2.03 million shares on Tuesday.

One of the bigger gainers on the Amex was Risdon Manufacturing, which advanced 1/4 to 18 1/2 after the company predicted that 1976 would be the best year in the company's history.

In the counter market, the NASDAQ industrial index finished off 0.13 to 96.51 while the composite index ended unchanged at 89.24. A total of 369 issues fell while 341 rose. Volume dropped to 5.83 million shares from 6 million shares the day before.

Options on the exchange eased to 26,189 contracts from 28,608 on Tuesday. Open interest amounted to 768,790 unexercised or unexpired contracts. On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, 55,159 contracts traded against 71,316 the day before. Open interest totaled 1,222,822 contracts.

By comparison with the 3.3 percent rise in April among seven of the city's largest stores, department stores in the metropolitan area in April had an average increase of 8.6 percent over last year, the check found.

Even the combined March-April results in the area were better than the city's averaging 5.9 percent ahead of last year.

In analyzing this variance from results in the suburbs, New York City merchants attributed their less-than-expected April sales to the city's continuing economic problems.

Other than this year's results in March, when the low sales advance directly reflected an unfavorable comparison with a full month of the Easter shopping season in March last year, the April sales gain was the smallest of 1976. Gains in the city, compared with the 1975 results, are January 3.5 percent, February 4.5 percent, March 2 percent and April 3.3 percent.

Refining Operating Capacity Down

Operating capacity in the nation's refineries fell sharply as almost half a million barrels a day of petroleum-refining capacity was shut out of operation largely removed for repairs and inspection.

Production of gasoline in the United States last week compared with 6.67 million barrels a day in the previous week. A year ago in the comparable week, the nation's refineries produced 6.07 million barrels a day of gasoline.

Stocks of motor fuel fell to their lowest level in the latest week from 229.7 million barrels a week earlier. A year ago gasoline supplies in the nation stood at 228.38 million barrels.

Concern among energy analysts about possible spot shortages of gasoline during the summer is growing but the majority still feel that they can be avoided, barring any unexpected problem at a major refinery or even a sharper growth in consumption than the present 7.7 percent increase.

PORTER SEEKING FANSTEEL SHARES

United Technologies Corporation said yesterday that it planned to acquire the remaining 30 percent of the Otis Elevator Company that it does not now own.

Under the plan, approved by United's board, each publicly owned share of Otis would be exchanged for 45/100th of a share of a new convertible preferred stock of United bearing a cumulative annual dividend of $7.32 and a liquidating value of $100. Each share of the new stock will be convertible into about 2.67 shares of United common stock, which would adjust for the 3-for-1 split announced on April 13, 1976.

United, formerly United Air-Conditioning, said the merger plan would require approval of two-thirds of the outstanding shares to be voted at a special shareholders meeting set for June 23. May 12 is the record date for Otis shareholders entitled to vote.

SW Industries of Providence, R.I., announced yesterday that it had agreed in principle with BTR Ltd. of Britain for the acquisition of SW by BTR. SW shareholders would get $42 in cash for each of their shares. With 683,867 shares outstanding the total consideration would come to $28.7 million.

Shareholders will vote on the offer at a meeting to be held July 8. Consumption, the company said, is contingent on the approval of the merger by the Bank of England and other conditions.

This advertisement is neither an offer to sell nor a solicitation of offers to buy any of these securities. The offering is made only by the Prospectus.

United, formerly United Air-Conditioning, said the merger plan would require approval of two-thirds of the outstanding shares to be voted at a special shareholders meeting set for June 23. May 12 is the record date for Otis shareholders entitled to vote.

SW Industries of Providence, R.I., announced yesterday that it had agreed in principle with BTR Ltd. of Britain for the acquisition of SW by BTR. SW shareholders would get $42 in cash for each of their shares. With 683,867 shares outstanding the total consideration would come to $28.7 million.

Shareholders will vote on the offer at a meeting to be held July 8. Consumption, the company said, is contingent on the approval of the merger by the Bank of England and other conditions.

Hispanic Stores Revive Jackson Heights Block

Continued From Page 38... another," said Orlando Luis Morales, who sells unpainted furniture in his store on 37th Avenue. There are no gates on the stores on that block. One reason for this sense of security is illustrated by an incident that might have had a different ending in other neighborhoods. Mr. Morales noticed one afternoon that three young men had stopped outside a store where he knew a woman was working alone. His brother, Herman, who has an antique store along the street—and goes to Baruch College—Also spotted the three. So did a couple of other men in nearby stores. The storekeepers left the store and just stood near the three strangers. Soon the three strangers left the area. "I think we deterred them," said Mr. Morales. "I think we deterred them," said Mr. Morales. Bonny Long, one of the few native Americans with a store on the block—it is called the Impossible Dream and sells religious items and oranges—has a special reason for liking her neighbors. When she is waiting on customers, she knows that everyone is keeping an eye on her little boy, Matthew, when he toddles along the sidewalk.

GOLDIN PROTESTS CLEANING CHARGES

Calls Work 'Deplorable' and Balks at Paying Bills... By EDWARD RANZAN... New York City pays $4.5 million a year to contractors to clean the offices of city agencies that occupy rented premises. However, "housework" has been so "deplorable" that Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin said yesterday that he had refused to pay 90 percent of the bills. The level of performance is so low and the failure to meet specifications is so widespread that 90 percent of all vouchers received by my office for cleaning services are being rejected," Mr. Goldin said. After vouchers for payment have been submitted, inspectors from Mr. Goldin's office check the work of the contractor. The inspectors have reported that the work is inadequate or the dirt totally undisturbed, Mr. Goldin said. Confronted with the inspector's reports, the contractors have agreed to cut as much as 50 percent of their bills, Mr. Goldin said. By cutting the cleaning bills on an average of 25 percent, Mr. Goldin said he had saved the city about $1 million. Agencies Criticized... The Comptroller sternly criticized the city agencies who use cleaning contractors for routinely approving bills for payment in full, apparently unaware that their offices are as dirty following the "cleaning" as they were before. Mr. Goldin identified the agencies as Probation, Economic Development, Social Services and Real Estate. Mr. Goldin cited as an example of "how an agency can wastefully expend money," he said that because of his efforts, Triple A Maintenance Corporation had agreed to reduce its voucher by 25 percent and do work that it had not completed. Despite this agreement, he said, the work was still being done. Mr. Goldin said he was demanding a 50 percent reduction.

11 Areas Told to Zone for Less Affluent

Judge Furman agreed with Justice Hall's Mount Laurel opinion that "courts do not build housing," but he added that "in implementing this judgment the 11 municipalities must do more than rezone not to exclude the possibility of low- and moderate-income housing in the allocated amounts." Judge Furman called on the 11 municipalities to "pursue and cooperate in available Federal and state subsidy programs for new housing and rehabilitation of substandard housing." In a case involving public housing in Chicago, the United States Supreme Court ruled on April 20 that Federal courts could order low-cost public housing for minorities in a city's white suburbs to relieve racial segregation in housing within the city. However, because of the special circumstances in Chicago, the full implications of that ruling are not yet clear.

Engelhard to Expand Its Headquarters

Continued From Page 1, Col. 8... Officials of Englehard and McGraw-Hill would not discuss the deal, but sources close to the negotiations said it would cost Englehard a total of $60 million, not counting increases in later years for rising taxes, energy, labor and other costs. Premium Rate... This figure indicates that the rent for the space alone, without services, will be in excess of $11 a square foot, a premium rate in today's depressed office rental market. Because of overbuilding, the movement of major companies out of the city and the loss of more than 500,000 jobs in the last six years, there are now more than 25 million square feet of unrented space in first-class office buildings in the city, some of it available for as little as $8 a square foot. Speaking of the size of Englehard's new commitment to New York City, Mr. Rosenthal said, "This is the type of marriage that is not easily dissolved; we have dedicated the next generation of our company to the city." The company's president, who was born in New York and was graduated from Townsend Harris High School, City College and the Columbia University Law School, said that unlike many other concerns, Englehard had never had difficulties in getting middle managers and professional employees to move to the city to take posts at its headquarters. "For the people we have asked to come here, the attractions seem to outweigh the problems," he said. Joint Decision... Many other locations were considered before he and his principal colleagues decided jointly to keep the company here, Mr. Rosenthal said. "If one looks solely from the point of view of scenery or personal taxation, one could find more attractive locations. But we like to keep our eyes on the profit line at the bottom of the page, and we can best serve our interests where we can best conduct our business." Analysis had shown, he said, that no place in the world offered a trading company like Englehard and its principal operating subsidiary, Phillip Brothers, a better base of operations. The company sells metals, minerals, ores, fuels and fertilizers in international markets and therefore needs good communications, quick access to the financial community and worldwide travel connections. The company was formerly headed by the late Charles W. Engelhard, the industrialist and race horse owner who died of a heart attack in 1971 at the age of 54. Mr. Engelhard, over a period of 20 years, ran an inheritance of $20 million into an industrial fortune of more than $250 million and became a power in the international financial and business commu-

Networks Weighing 45-Minute Newscasts for Fall

LES BROWN length was inadequate to make clear the complexities of our time." Mr. Taylor contended a long-term program of national and foreign news was necessary because television has become the major source of news for most people. He did not specify, however, whether CBS intended to expand its newscast to 45 or 60 minutes.

Yesterday, a high-ranking official at ABC, although acknowledging the 45-minute newscast proposal was "in trouble" because of affiliate protests, said he believed his network nevertheless would adopt it.

Moreover, he said, the ABC affiliates would probably accept the plan because it would be offered with other accommodatations of air time that would ensure them no loss of revenues. He would not discuss how that would work, however, saying that it was being kept secret until it could be formally presented to affiliates at their meeting May 24.

Although NBC has as yet made no official statement on the matter of longer newscasts, it is a foregone conclusion in the industry that if one network takes the step, the others will be forced to follow.

That occurred in 1963, when NBC increased "The Hunt for Brinkley Report" from 15 to 30 minutes.

The first word of ABC's intentions to lengthen its newscast came when it hired Barbara Walters from NBC to co-anchor the program with Harry Reasoner under a one-year contract that would pay her $1 million a year. Miss Walters is to join the network in September.

To Recoup Investment

ABC had reasoned it could recoup that unprecedented investment by expanding the newscast. Its officials believed then the stations would accept the idea because Miss Walters offered them a chance to improve their ratings.

But most stations are enjoying record business this year, and many are unwilling to give up lucrative early-evening time to the network.

According to industry estimates, a gain of 15 minutes in the early evening every week might increase a network's revenues as much as $30 million a year. But at the same time, it would cause the stations to give up anywhere from $2,000 to $12,000 a week of their present revenues, the amounts depending on the size of the population areas the stations serve.

Lack of News

Under ABC's plan for a 45-minute newscast, the individual stations would be expected to match the network's program with one of equal length for local news, to create a 30-minute news block each evening.

Some stations say they are opposed to this because they have other expensive program commitments in the early-evening time period, and some, in smaller communities, have objected on the ground that there is too little local news in their

CHINESE STATION GOES ON AIR TODAY

A new Chinese-language radio station, Sinocast, will begin broadcasting here today from 9 A.M. to midnight.

The station will broadcast to subscribers on a subfrequency leased from WRVR-FM by the Sino Radio Broadcasts Corporation, at 401 Broadway. Its programs will not be received by normal FM sets; purchase of a special set is required.

Another concern, Chung Hwa Broadcasting Company, has served the Chinatown area for the last eight years. A closed circuit, it would cause the stations to give up anywhere from $2,000 to $12,000 a week of their present revenues, the amounts depending on the size of the population areas the stations serve.

Bob Dylan Sets a Special On NBC-TV for Sept. 14

Bob Dylan will star in his first television special on NBC-TV on Tuesday, Sept. 14.

The program is scheduled to be broadcast between 10 and 11 P.M. It was taped before an invited audience on April 22 in Clearwater, Fla., at the Bellevue Hotel. Out of more than eight hours of music and 30 songs performed by Mr. Dylan, the show will be edited down to one hour's length. The Craig Corporation, manufacturer of car stereo units and components, is sponsoring the program.
